EMBALMED BEEF INVESTIGATION

Maj. Carlton and Capt. Smith Say Meat Sent to Santiago and Porto Rico Was Good-Another War Inquiry Probable.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.] WASHINGTON, Jan. 14 .- [Exclusive Dispatch.] Gen. Eagan is going to back down, in part, regarding his statement before the War Investigat ing Commission, concerning Gen. Miles. This back-down will be of a negative sort, but it will be a back-

When the war board sent Eagan's testimony back to him in typewritten form and refused to admit it to the records of the board unless the object tionable parts were eliminated, Eagan had his opportunity to declare that was his testimony given under oath to tell the whole truth, and that he could eliminate no part of it. It was rather expected that he would do this, but he does not intend to do so.

Today Gen. Eagan set about the un-pleasant task of being his own censor when he began editing his testimony and getting it into proper form for presentation to the War Investigating Board. That task is unpleasant, fo it places directly upon Gen. Eagan the duty of deciding what part of his own testimony regarding Gen. Miles is decent and which is indecent.

Eagan's position is rendered more difficult by the discovery that Carlton of Inspector-General Wilson's most of his intemperate invective is founded upon misquotation and misinterpretation of Miles's statements before the commission. The phrase attached to Miles by Eagan, which caused nine-tenths of the trouble, was 'refrigerated or embalmed beef furnished under pretense of experiment," does not occur in the report of Miles's testimony, nor in any interviews attributed to him is there found connection between "embalmed" or refrigerated beef and "pretense of experiment." In the use of the quoted phrase, Gen. Miles referred exclusively to canned "roast" beef, which is admittedly an experimental ration, as stated by Eagan himself. Refrigerated beef is a constituent ration, but the commissary department believed from the beginning it could not be used in the tropics, and substituted alleged "roast" beef as an experiment.

The War Department continues to refrain from committing itself on probable action in this case. Gen. Alger spent a couple of hours with the President today talking the matter over, but he refus absolutely to make a public stateme about. The President is deeply affer ed by Gen. Eagans action. He has about concluded that for the protection of the honor of the American army, he cannot allow the incident to pass unnoticed, and his vigor in dealing with ft when the proper moment arrives may surpirse the whole War Department.

KEY TO THE SOLUTION.

[ASSOCIATED PRESS DAY REPORT.]

WASHINGTON, Jan. 14.—The key to the solution of the difficulty betwen Gen. Eagan and Gen. Miles was today in the hands of the former. The war commission having called upon him to modify his statement, nothing can be done until he either has revised his first declaration or has notified the commission of his refusal to do so. It is confidently expected by the best-informed officials that the commissary-general will modify his statement to meet the criticisms of the commission. He himself will make Esterhazy adds that he was warned a month ahead of Matthew Dreyfus's intention and denounced it at the instigation of Col. Picquart.

Subsequent to this he had the closest relations with his superiors and acted throughout on their instructions until January 7, 1898, when, he claims, the war ministry suddenty assumed a hostile attitude toward him. Fresh proceedings, the Count asserts, were instituted at the instigation of his cousin, with the view of getting him out of the way and preventing him from testifying before the Court of Cassation.

In conclusion, Esterhazy says: "Alone exiled, abandoned by those who should have defended me, I have resisted the most tempting offers and have refused to say or write a word against my chiefs. [ASSOCIATED PRESS NIGHT REPORT.] CHARLESTON (W. Va.,) Jan. 14. The chief developments in the West Virginia Senatorial situation today was the issuing of a call for a Republican Senatorial caucus to be held next Thursday night. The petition was put in circulation by the Scott forces. It was indorsed also by Gov. Atkin-son's managers. The Democratis to-day put in circulation a call for a Senatorial caucus to be held next

In the House today a sensation was reated by the refusal of two Democratic members to vote in favor of the Representative of a special commission, which recommended that Via (Rep.) which recommended that Via (Rep.) from Monroe quinty be unseated, and Logan (Dem.) be seated in his place. A third Democrat paired off with a Republican, and Via having been temporarily unseated, could not vote. The ballot resulted in a tie, 34 to 34. The question will be voted on again Monday.

SACRAMENTO, Jan. 14.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] In the small hours of this morning convulsive chuckles shook the frames of such of the Burns gang as were pacing their beats in the lobby of the Golden Eagle Hotel. These gloaters were anticipating good sport on the morrow, for they had been told that another human being was to be driven into the political quagmire from which there is no escape, and which brings speedy destruction and damnation to those caught in its muck. The Republican County Committee, whipped to the deed by the lash of Dan Burns, had ordered Assemblyman W. D. Knights of Sacramento to forfeit his principles of manhood and travel the crooked path that other poor slaves of Burns, have gone. Burns needed votes, and no matter by what methods he got them, he was going to have them, and Knights was first on the list. Accordingly, he was summoned before the County Committee, of which A. J. Bruner is chairman, and ordered to change his vote today from Barnes to Burns, and in and before the eyes of the entire State, proclaim himself a lost soul. None of Mexican Dan's chuckling cohorts doubted that Knights would obey instructions, all the more since in addition to the orders he received from his co-committeeman, Jack Wright, a Southern Pacific "magnet," was credited with having tried his power at drawing Knights from the traight path. The story was too good to keep, and some of Mexican Dan's closest advisers were talking first to "give it away," so that the newspaper men got an item and published a new sensation.

BALLOTING RESUMED.

The Assembly chamber, with its drapings of pink and apple-green and patriotic colors, which drapings graced the inaugural ball, was filled with a miscellaneous crowd of legislators, leg-pullers, silly women and decent people, as on previous occasions, but there was more curiosity apparent than had marked the other gatherings. The news had been disseminated that precedents forbade a vote for Senator on the Sabbath, and this being the last day of balloting for this week, an indefinable idea took root that in conjunction with the downfall of Knights, something else would hap-

BURNS FORCES SURPRISED. There was curiosity to find how Huber would vote, and when he an-"Grant," and it became apparent that he was unshaken, despite the pressure he had been subjected the Bulla forces, murmurs of "Good!" were heard in the chamber Then came the name of Jilson, the flopper from Hornbrook, who is probably wrongfully accused of harboring an intention to flop back to Grant, and the names of Johnson, Kelley, Kelsey and Kenneally, a Burns quar tette, and then came Knights. "W. H. L. Barnes," was the response in clear tones, and, my, how the cheers did The effect was electrical, and twice the applause died down to swell again. The Burns contingent was dumfounded, not alone by the way Knights voted, but by reason of the applause which seemed general throughout the chamber.

KNIGHTS , COMPLIMENTED. Senator Cutter, leader of part of Grant's forces, complimented Knights on his firmness, and speaking to the Times representative, later, said few could know the extent of Knights's courage in view of the grasp which the railroad has on this city and county, which is Knights's ; home Cutter thought Knights had burned his bridges behind him, and had when issue with the "boss." In order to maintain their strength the ruling figure, the Grant people pressed Dr. Marvin of Humboldt into service. RESULT OF THE BALLOTING. The first ballot resulted: Barnes, 9; Bulla, 9; Burns, 25; Felton, 1; Grant, 27; Knight, 2; Scott, 2; Patterson, 2; Bard, 2; Estee, 1; Rosenfeldt, 1; Coffey (Dem.,) 33; Judge W M. Conley of Madera (Dem.,) 1.

Three more ballots were taken, and the Republican votes remained unchanged, though the number of those voting dropped to 112. The Democrats balloted in succession for Conley, Hall, who is somewhat fickle in his voting, giving his vote to Senator Doty and for Attorney-General Joe Hamilton of Placer, and Charles D. Lane.

NO SUNDAY SESSION.

Two efforts were made to secure an adjournment, and the last being successful, the joint convention adjourned

The question of a Sunday session was settled by a telegram from Senator Perkins, which was announced by Judge Dibble, to the effect that the United States Judiciary Committee had decided that Sunday is not a legislative day.

VOTED LIKE CATTLE.

The incident which shows how Burns's adherents are voted like cattle was witnessed during the second roll call on adjournment, when Shortridge, who was fooling around in his seat, blurted out, "Burns," instead of "aye" or "nay." The incident provoked much laughter, for its significance was apparent. Shortridge, however, could not see that it was in any way derogatory to himself, and soined in the laughter.

Sig. Bettman, discussing Knight's fallure to vote for Burns, said he did not know why Knights "fell down," unless it was to give the lie to newspaper predictions. Like Guy Barham, he thought Burns would get Knights "if he (Burns) wants him."

vote went to Contey, of San Francisco. On the second ballot the Democrats changed and gave the vote to Conley of Madera. This all lent variety to the affair. which was becoming monotonous. So monotonous had it become that a motion to adjourn was lost by a vote of 25 to 84.

The third and fourth ballots for the session, showed no change in the Republican vote. The Democratic complimentary vote on these ballots went respectively to Joe R. Hamilton and C. D. Lane. After the twelfth ballot had been taken, a motion to adjourn was as follows:

NOT PLEDGED TO BURNS. A Bee reporter interviewed Knights

"Will you vote for Burns?" he was "No, not unless I have positive assurance of the people of my district that they want me to do so.' AN EXAMPLE FOR ANGELENOS.

Senator Cutter of Marysville one of the Grant leaders, said the Los Angeles delegates who were hanging fire could take pattern from Knights. Enormous pressure had been brought to bear on the latter, which pressure the Angeleños would not experience, yet Knights had endured and dared more than the men who were clinging to Bulla when they fain would break away. As he understood it, he said Los Angeles delegation had obeyed a resolution instructing it for Bulla, and now was free to assist in electing a Senator. He did not understand, he said, how it was, when the northern counties were giving 21 votes to help the south get a Senator. no more consideration was shown by the men from the Angel City, whose efforts were apparently rected toward the election of Burns. Bulla could not win, he declared, emphatically, and the sole effect of his candidacy is to strengthen Burns. Senator Cutter is one of the shrewdmen in the State, and he is a legislator of varied experiences. There is food for thought in the intimation that the northern counties may get tired of the foolish actions of half a dozen men from Los Angeles, and may seek no further alliance with the legislators from that section.

The Los Angeles members held another meeting today to renew their promises and keep Bulla's courage up. They are getting numerous telegrams to stiffen their spines.

BURNS AND BULLA ROORBACKS. The intimation made in certain quarters that money was used to inuence Huber's 'change of vote has led sensational newspapers to endeavor to fix on Grant's managers culpability in the alleged employment of money to secure elections of legislators who would vote for Grant, and tonight the names of three legislators are connected with the rumors. The Burns and Bulla forces are in desperate straits, and all kinds of yarns may be ooked for. Huber says that so far as he is concerned, he is entirely innocent of any wrong-doing, and decent people here are taking his word.

IN STATU QUO.

Change in the Senatorial Situa tion in Forty-eight Hours.

[ASSOCIATED PRESS NIGHT REPORT.] SACRAMENTO, Jan. 14.-After four ballots for United States Senator to-day, the Senatorial fight is practically where it was twenty-four and fortyeight hours ago. The fact that sev-eral members were absent today made some slight change in the vote, and Marvin of Humboldt made his fourth from this the vote of the last ballot of today was precisely the same as of today was precisely the same as the last ballot of yesterday. This is leaving the Democrats who do not count out of the question. Their vote is going to every Democrat in the State who has any claim whatever to promi-count out of the question. Their vote is going to every Democrat in the State who has any claim whatever to prominence.

The Assembly chamber was packed when the vote was taken at noon today. The Senators were announced as usual, and marched in solemn file down the center aisle, Shortridge at the head, and took seats with their respective Assemblymen. The minutes of yesterday's joint cneeting were read, and the ballot the ninth of the session, was taken.

There was no change in the Republican vote on the Senate roll call, and Assemblyman Knights of Sacramento became the center of attraction. Knights has all along been a Barnes man. Last night, however, the Secramento Republican County Central Committee met and instructed the Republican members of Sacramento county to vote for Burns. It was confidently expected that Knights would follow his instructions, but when his name was called he answered: "Gen. W. H. L. Barnes."

His vote was met with applause which lasted for several minutes. The anti-Burns forces were jubilant. The expected gain in the Burns ranks had not been realized. The roll call continued with but one change in the Republican vote, Marvin keeps people guessing. On Tuesday he voted for Knight, changed to Grant, deserted Grant for Felton, and is now voting for Grant again. His Monday's vote has not yet been announced.

It was found when the roll call was called that the following Republican members were absent:

Senator Stratton, who had voted for Grant; Anderson, who had voted for Grant; Anderson, who had voted for Estee; and Miller of San Francisco, who had voted each day for Gen. Barnes; Assemblyman Chynoweth, who had voted for Estee; and Miller of San Francisco, who had voted each day for Gen. Barnes; Assemblyman Chynoweth, who had voted for Estee; and Miller of San Francisco, on the second ballot the Democrats complimentary vote went to Coffey, of San Francisco, On the second ballot the Democrats changed and gave the vote to Conley of Madera. effect of American Competition Certain Scotch Industries. [ASSOCIATED PRESS NIGHT REPORT.1

WASHINGTON, Jan. 14-The effect of American competition upon Scotch industries in the three great lines, steel, engines and machinery, and leather goods, is set out in a report to the bureau of foreign commerce of the State Department from United States Consul Fleming at Edinburgh. He bases his re port upon a review of the year's trade prepared for publication in a Scotch newspaper by experts in the lines named. The opinion of the expert in the case of steel is that the Scotch steel maker has allowed his plant to get behind the times in capacity, while the American steel maker has made such enormous strides in production that his extraordinary success seems to threaten the trade of the world. by experts in the lines extraordinary success seems to threaten the trade of the world. Touching the introduction omotives experts are quot ed to show that the American machine ed to show that the American machine, while sold at a lower price than the British locomotive, is inferior in durability and other desirable qualities, and is being gradually crowded out by the latter. This is said to be the case in Japan particularly, where the British and American machines have been tried simultaneously for some time past. The difference in price in favor of the American locomotive is explained by the theory that the new Winchester system of cumpulsory inspection in England. theory that the new Winchester system of cumpulsory inspection in England, causes the rejection of much valuable material at all stages of manufacture, while the American manfacture is not obliged to submit to inspection, and is therefore enabled to use inferior matherefore manded to use inferior ma-terial. The consul, in rendering this opinion, adds, that as the Midland Rali-way Company in England has just or-dered twenty American locomotives, it would , seem that the managers are not especially apprehensive that the Amer-ican machines cannot pass the British test.

especially apprehensive that the American machines cannot pass the British test.

It is admitted that the Americans and Canadians still retain the bulk of the important trade in agricultural machinery and have practically a monopoly. There is also an open confession in the case of the boot and shoe trade, that the British cannot make a shoe equal to the American product for the same price. The experts say: "To our annoyance and irritation, it must be candidly admitted that their manufactures, for beauty of style, handsome appearance and perfection of fit, excels ours: in their words, they have 'gone one better' on us."

The British manufcaturers had hoped that the American shoe would be found to be lacking in wearing quality, but there again they were disappointed, for the expert admits that the American shoe is made of the same leather that the British shoemaker uses. In upper leather, entirely and in sole leather to a great degree, the American leather excels the British currier and tanner, and the latter have admitted they must adopt American methods, if they are to survive. A large part of the British colonial trade has been captured by the Americans, who have now wrested away from the mother country, almost the whole of the boot and shoe trade of West Australia and Africa.

THAT MEAT INSPECTION BILL

TURISTS FOR PROTECTION.

Pole to Be Tried for High Treason Anxiety Over Stringency in a Money Market-What Thun Did.

[ASSOCIATED PRESS NIGHT REPORT.] BERLIN, Jan. 14 .- [Special cable letter; Copyright, 1899.] States Ambassador Andrew D. White said to the correspondent of the Asso-clated Press today for publication:

"Our relations with Germany are thoroughly good and are steadily improving. I look to the proposed meat inspection as a step calculated to help rather than hurt us. What thinking men on each side wish to secure is a single inspection which will be valid throughout the empire, and supersede the various local inspections which are often prompted by a panic arising from isolated trichinae cases, justly or unjustly attributed to foreign meats.

"Regarding the question of acquisi tion in the Pacific and elsewhere, the feeling of the two governments is ex-cellent. The German Foregn Office shows every desire that this state of things should continue, and the Ger-man officials in every way work in harmony with us. In the Pacific, as else where, there is not the slightest cause at present for the slightest ill-feeling arising out of the ambitions of either power, and all questions are bei steadily placed on a better footing. THAT MEAT BILL.

The Bundesrath considered the meat inspection bill this week, and the favor able view taken of the measure by the American Ambassador is contrasted by the fact that the agrarian press this week very severely criticised the bill.

EXPORT STATISTICS. Official statistics of German exports to the United States show that they amounted during the last quarter, in the northern half of Germany, excluding the Zittlau Consulate, to $12,503,161, compared with $9,024,947 in 1897. In the southern half the German exports to the United States amounted to $8,815,-189, being an increase of $626,539. The total increase for the past quarter amounted to about $5,000,000, mainly due to unwar exports, which care to amounted to about $5,000,000, mainly due to sugar exports, which came to a standstill during the last quarter of 1898. The total exports for 1898, however, show a decrease when compared with those of 1897. This also is mainly traceable to sugar, of which from the Brunswick Consulate alone, the exports diminished over $2,500,000.

PROTECTIVE TARIFF. strong movement in favor of protective tariff has been set on foot by the horticulturalists of Germany by the horticulturalists of Germany. A meeing of over 1000 of them has addressed a strongly-worded petition to the Imperial government, reciting their reasons for demanding protection. The Minister of the Interior has summoned the president of the organization to furnish him with additional information on the subject, and there is reason to believe the government intends to frame a tariff measure which will meet the horticulturists' views.

HIGH TREASON TRIAL.

HIGH TREASON TRIAL A sensational high treason trial has fixed for next month before the Supreme Court of Leipsic. The prisoner, a Pole named Goldhumer, claiming to be a dealer in precious stones, was arrested at Metz on his arrival there from Paris. It is said the evidence collected directly implicates a number of higher government and mil tary officers in France.

STRINGENT MONEY MARKET. There is some anxiety in official cir cles at the exceeding stringency of the FINANCIAL CONDITIONS. Considerable indignation is evinced at the unfavorable reports emanating from London, concerning the economi-cal and financial conditions of Germany, especially the statement that the leading English banks recently declined to accept Prussian bills for a large amount. This statement is de-clared to be utterly untrue and calcuclared to be utterly untrue and calcu-lated to unfavorably impress the Ger-man borrowers with respect to the im-pending losns. The National Zeitung in an inspired article points out that the present financial tightness is solely due to the extraordinary expansion of Ger-man industry, which has absorbed im-mense quantities of capital.

WHAT THUN DID.

Facts have come to the knowledge of the government showing that the Austrian Premier, Count Thun Hohenstein, trian Fremier, Count Thun Hohenstein, for a number of months preceding his attack on the German government in the Reichsrath, systematically accumulated every shred of evidence tending to demonstrate that Germany had exceeded treaty powers in expelling Austrian subjects. MANUFACTURERS' PLAINT.

[ASSOCIATED PRESS NIGHT REPORT.] BERLIN, Jan. 14.-The manufacturers in this country of cotton velvets, eau de cologne, and chocolate have appealed to the government to try and induce the Washington authorities to rescind the latest interpretation of the tariff appraisement of those articles, which they claim is unfair and will ruin their export trade to America, and compel them to erect speoial factories in the United States.

LINSEED OIL TRUST. Big Combine Formed-Headquarters Probably in Chicago.
[ASSOCIATED PRESS NIGHT REPORT.]

CLEVELAND (O.,) Jan. 14.—A new linseed oil combination has been formed, the incorporation taking place in New Jersey, under the name of the American Linseed Company. The National Linseed Oil Company of Chicago was incorporated about ten years ago, and included thicty-seven establishments. From then until now it has been fought by the twenty or thirty outsiders, who produced about thirty outsiders, who produced about 65 per cent. of the total output. The statement is made that all of these concerns have gone into the new com-pany. Today, the property of the Cleveland Linseed Oil Company was transferred to the American company for the nominal consideration of $1. The headquarters of the new company will probably be in Chicago.

ATTEMPTED ROBBERY.

Swindlers Altered Bills of Lading on Carlonds of Wheat. on Carloads of Wheat.
[ASSOCIATED PRESS DAY REPORT.] OMAHA (Neb.,) Jan. 14.—A special to the Bee from Sloux Falls, S. D., says H. P. Elliott, claim agent of the Milwaukee road, has been investigat-ing an unusually bold attempt to steal a number of carloads of wheat by the alteration of the bills of lading. The wheat was shipped from Erwin, Bry-ant, Oldham and Ramona and other places in this State, and was originally consigned to Minneapolis, but was diverted to Chicago instead. The swindlers missed their opportunity by being too greedy and holding the grain at Chicago, for better market and the fraud was detected before they realized. The railroad officials have hopes of apprehending the guilty parties, whose identity is known.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 14.-[Exclusive Dispatch.] Senator Perkins today visited the War Department and se-cured the promise from Col. Mackenzie, in charge of river and harbor work, that he would favorably recommend an appropriation of $400,000 for the imnent of the inner harbor at Sar Pedro. This will be done at once and an effort will be made to have the amount included in the bill which will be passed at this session. Should it be passed over by the House, it will be put in by the Senate, and an effort made to uphold the amount in con-ference. There is a report favoring this improvement made by the engineer of the War Department several years ago, and this fact makes it more likely that action may be had at this

CRAGIN'S CANAL SCHEME.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 14 .- [Exclusive Dispatch.] It is understood that Edwin asked the administration to abandon the Nicaragua Canal, as a govern-ment project, upon receiving assurances that the Grace syndicate of New York has money at its disposal for the construction of the waterway, and proposes to go ahead and construct it in good faith. That is claimed to be the reason why Cragin is now in Wash-Ington, and why he called upon the President and Secretary Hay yesterday. Mr. Cragin further proposes that this government shall have an interest in the canal, and shall have the right to maintain its neutrality in time of war ment shall have an interest in between foreign countries, or close it against ships of an enemy at war with the United States. He claims this is all that would be needed to make the government perfectly secure, and he further claims an arrangement satisfactory to England can be made.

If Mr. Cragin is able to secure any encouragement from the President, he will definitely state his proposition before the House Committee on Com-merce Tuesday, when the committee passed away. At the late home of Mr. Dingley, the Hamilton Hotel, there were many evidences of that deep personal esteem in which he was held. Messages of condolence came from every quarter of the country, and to these were added the personal condolences of Cabinet members. Senators, Supreme Justices and members of the House.

DINGLEY'S DEATH.

Profound Sorrow Manifested for th Statesman's Taking Off.

Secretaries Alger and Wilson were among the earliest callers, and following them were the Bishop of Washington, Rt. Rev. Dr. Satterlee, Senators Hale, Burrows, Fairbanks, Representatives Henderson, Cannon, Dockery and, indeed, nearly every man in Congress with whom Mr. Dingley had beet associated during his long and totable service. The callers left their cards, as the family were too deeply bowed down with grief to receive in person the many tributes of respect.

Mrs. Dingley was prostrated with the shock and with the tension of many days of constant vigil at her husband's bedside. But she was reported to be bearing up bravely and no serious apprehension was expressed as to her condition.

prehension was expressed as to her condition.

In the House of Representatives the death of Mr. Dingley came as a personal bereavement to the many members with whom he had long been associated. The desk he had occupied as floor leader of the House, in the center of the Republican side of the chamber, was heavily draped in crape, while on top was an array of orchids, sweet flag, coral sprays and smilax. As the members came on the floor they joined in groups and in hushed tones spoke not only of the personal loss, but also of the loss to the country and the House of Representatives in particular, in the passing of the noble leader at a time when his genius and talent were of incalculable service to his country. There was but one voice from both sides of the chamber in the expression of grief.

"We mourn with you in this overwhelming loss which will be deeply felt by the whole country. From my long and intimate association with him it comes to me as a personal bereavement. A great consolation in this sad hour is a recollection of Mr. Dingley's exalted character, his domestic virtues, his quiet, useful distinguished life and his long-continued and faithful service in behalf of his fellow-citizens who will always checish his memory as that of a great statesman and true patriot.

FIFTY-FIFTH CONGRESS. CONCLUDING SESSION.

[ASSOCIATED PRESS DAT REPORT.] WASHINGTON, Jan. 14.-SENATE .-

At the opening of the Senate's session today the blind chaplain paid a tribute to the late Nelson Dingley. A letter was presented from Mr. Frye of Maine, president pro tem, appointing Mr. Gallinger of New Hampshire to preside over the Senate in the absence of the Vice-President and himself.

Mr. Hoar introduced the following resolution:

"Resolved, that the people of the Philippine Islands of right ought to be free and independent; that they are absolved from all allegiance to the Spanish crown, and that all political connection between them and Spain is and ought to be totally dissolved, and they have therefore full power to do all acts and things which an independent state may of right do; that it is their right to institute a new government for themselves, laying a foundation on such principles and organizing its power in such form as then shall seem most likely to effect their safety and happiness, and that with these rights the people of the United States do not dispose to interfere."

The resolution of Mr. Allen for the appointment of a committee of five Seantors to investigate the conduct of the war was laid before the Senate, and Mr. Allen took the floor.

Mr. Allen sald he had no desire to embarrass the President, but so many complaints had been made by the press and individuals of the conduct of the war, that he thought it time for a rigid and impartial investigation of the war to be made. He had, he said, no confidence in the "Alger Relief Commission," which was not conducting an investigation of the war. He criticized the sending of troops to Chickamauga, where they were faced by sickness and death. He intimated that the troops of the West were sent to Chickamauga for the benefit of transportation companies. He declared that there had been gross irregularities in the handling of the commissary and other supplies. He said it had been charged that the supplies were in many cases unfit for use, and he was satisfied the charges were true. If the troops had been furnished "embalmed beef" the people and the world had a right to know it.

Interrupting Mr. Allen, Mr. Spooner of Wisconsin criticized him for his anticipation of an unfair and partial report was presented before he attacked it.

United States on an equal footing with Great Britain, and Mr. Griscom replied that after giving the question careful attention he had reached the conclusion that it would. He thought the United Statese could win if not too heavily handicapped. Replying to other questions of Mr. Elkins, he expressed the opinion that for the present England would not increase her subsidies. Mr. Elkins also questioned Mr. Griscom as to the propriety of a tax on the tonnage of British ships equal to the tax imposed by Great Britain on American ships. Mr. Griscom said he favored such a measure, but he hoped there would be no effort to put it on the pending bill. He said that there was no time within the last twenty years that such legislation would not have been advisable, and that it was "idiotic folly not to enact it." This statement brought from Senator Frye the remark that it would have been secured except for the opposition of the steamship companies.

"I know," he said, "of one instance in which a man who never, under ordinary circumstances, attended the early sessions of the Senate, sat through the morning hour every day for four months in order to prevent a measure of this kind from coming up in the morning in favor of the bill. Clement Griscom, president of the International Navigation Company also advocated the bill. He gave the details of the organization of the company and its transfer from Belgium to the United States, and the building of the St. Louis and the St. Paul. These vessels would have cost $1,100,000 less in Great Britain than in the United States. Interest and insurances charges were also much higher in this country than in England. The $750,000 received annually from the government for carrying the mails lacked $113,000 of meeting the extra expense involved in carrying the American flag. The company had made a living, but it was evident that it could not continue under the circumstances, and would have to quit when the present vessels were worn out. The company had not declared a dividend, and and would have to quit when the present vessels were worn out. The company had not declared a dividend, and it was evident that under the circumtances, no more American ships could be built. He thought nothing would restore American shipping, except a system that would reduce the cost of construction and the operation of steamers. The passage of the pending bill would relieve the situation, and if it should become a law, his company would build four more 14,000-ton ships within the next five years, and enter into contracts for as many more not to be completed within that period.

Senator Elkins asked if the bill would so equalize the conditions as to put the United States on an equal footing with Great Britain, and Mr. Griscom replied that after giving the question careful rounds, and blew eight dwellings from their foundations, the largest being steel buildings of the Steel Company, wrecked the Art Hall at the Fair Grounds, and blew eight dwellings from their foundations, the largest being 600x 220 feet. Just at what time the disaster, which esulted in such appalling loss of life, occurred, is not known, as every person on board the vessel went to the bottom of the sound with it.

The ship, which was of English build and worth probably $150,000; entered this port several days ago. She was loaded with wheat under charter for Europe. Yesterday the ship was taken to the Eureka dock and all ballast femoved and the hold cleaned preparatory to receiving cargo. She was then towed to an anchorage several hundred yards northeast of the St. Paul and Tacoma Lumber Company's deep-water wharf, at which point disaster overtook her.

The ship was riding he waves serenely when the skippers of other vessels anchored close by reof other vessels anchored close by re-tired the night before. When daylight dawned no signs of the Andelana were visible, and over the spot only a dan-ger signal buoy lamp was visible. When the absence of the ship was dis-

re obtainable. Judging from indicatons, shipping men say the ballast og found was from the port side of incomes, shipping men say the ballast log found was from the port side of of the vessel. The ship, according to all accounts, was headed in a southerly direction, or toward the head of the bay at the time the gale swept down the Sound. The heavy wind caused the ship to strain on the chains, making the log on the weather side taut and giving a tendency to lift the tog from the water, but the strain was too great for one of the chains and it mapped. This released the towering craft from the greater restraint on the weather side and she lifted with the wind, and there being fittle restraint from the other end of the log, raised it enough to allow the right or moorning chain to slip off. Thus free, the ship, freed from ballast and floating like a chip, careened over under the pressure of the heavy gale, shipping great quantities of water, filling completely the hold and forecastle, causing her to capsize and sink to the bottom, all in a very few minutes.

The situation was further aggravated by the fact that the tides were just setting in at the time the ship is supposed to have gone down. This, in all probability, forced the stern of the ressel around and exposed the broadtiffe to the gale's fury.

Late this afternoon, the ill-fated vestel was located. She lies on the bottom of the Sound on her broadside, under twenty-three fathoms of water flose by the spot where she had been anihored. Barrlett & Steed, agents for the owners, have cabled for instructions, but do not expect a reply before Monday, although they say the vessel was manned by a crew of nearly thirty men. Some deserted and others were discharged, until only aighten.

When the Andelana entered this port he was manned by a crew of nearly thirty men. Some deserted and others were discharged, until only eighteen were left. The only list of victims obtainable is that given by Percy B. Buck, an apprentice, who was injured two days prior to the disaster, and taken to one of the Tacoma hospitals. It is said the ship was insured by an anglish agency for $100,000. No bodies have, as yet been recovered, although every effort is being made in that direction.

When a man has overworked himself, and neglected his health, until he finally realizes that he is a sick man, he too frequently goes to some obscure physician who has had very little experience or practice; the result is a wrong diagnosis and the wrong treatment. WASHINGTON SENATORSHIP. Legislature Will Vote Tuesday in Separate Session.

[ASSOCIATED PRESS NIGHT REPORT.] OLYMPIA (Wash...) Jan. 14.-The Legislature will vote next Tuesday in separate session for a United States Senator. Senator J. L. Wilson's managers have been circulating a call for a caucus of the Republican members, but it seems unlikely that a caucus will be held before Tuesday night, after a ballot has been taken for Senator in each house.

The four active candidates for Senator are Senator John L. Wilson, Levi Ankeny, a banker of Walla Walla; A. G. Foster, a lumber dealer of Tacoma; and T. J. Humes, Mayor of Seattle. The fact that there are four candidates in the field, and that the strength of each is variously estimated, causes a large number of members to be more anxious for alignment of the forces in open session, than for a caucus that might be a surprise to them. tor in each house.

Did you ever think and wonder over the unfortunate turns in life? How many die of lost art and undeveloped talents? ELEVATE YOURSELF.

turns in life? How many die of lott art and undeveloped talents? ELEVATE YOURSELF.

Do not enter a business, profession or trade which nature has not intended for you. Humanity possesses strange and wonderful mental faculties. Some are born with a talent for a doctor, a lawyer, a preacher, mechanic, electrician. Others for farmers, florists, etc., etc. Should they take up and develop their latent power success will nine times out of ten crown their efforts.

PROF. KOHLER, who is acknowledged by press and public to be ordained to do what he does—baffles skeptics and hushes doubters of all sexes, classes and nationalities; seeing the great need of a ture and fully-developed psychic in this city, and well knowing the responsible position he has taken, he will endeavor to uplift and help place the profession upon a solid foundation here, as he has done in other cities. He stands at the head of his profession, and does not wish to be measured by any other standard than his own. He brings hundreds of personal indorsements from great people from nearly all civilized parts of the earth. His experience and knowledge of life is broad, deep and profound, and when united with his most marvecous psychic powers, it, makes of him all that he cleims to be—THE KING OF LIFE READERS. Don't fail to call and learn what gifts you possess. What are you titted for, do you know? Fine out at once. THIS MAY BE, his long experience and re-titled for, do you know? Fine out at once. THIS MAY BRING YOU LAURELS FOR A THOUGHT.

IT MATTERS NOT WHAT YOUR TROUBLES MAY BE, his long experience and remarkable ability in solving the nost complicated problems of life enables him to guide you aright in all your undertakings. He gives names, dates and facts, te is your name and the object of your cal without asking a question.

SO EXTRAORDINARY are his marvelous tests in life readings that they must be witnessed to be believed; his delineations of character and instructions upon the higher forces of man cannot fail to prove both profitable and beneficial to all; all bad habits, such as drunkenness, morphine, opium, tobacco, etc., and a large majority of diseases are traceable to nervous disorders, and can be overcome inderstanding and cultivation of the higher mental forces possessed by all. Become master of your own forces, and ail inharmonious conditions.

sickness, business worries and ail inharmonicus conditions.

Many seek the advice of their confidential friends, follow their advice and reap unfortunate losses. In ancient days rulers of kingdoms dispatched for their advicess, their prophets, to know the outlook before them, to guide them in their movements, whether t prepare for war or make peace. Has that prepare for war or make peace. Has that lower vanished from humanity? No. It still over an in ancient times, but possessed their control of advancement? Has not every other mental science advanced also, and why not this gift which the One above bestows upon whom He desire. There are many so-called psychologists, etc., but there must be some rall, NOTHING REAL, NOTHING to imitate and the some rall control of the some rall control of profession.

ARE YOU INTERESTED IN YOUR FUTURE PROSPECTS? Will you marry?
When? Is business bad? How improve it?
Have you a lawsuit? Will you win it? Or a divorce? Or anything else? A visit to this noted psychic may save you many sorrows, sighs and regrets. He warns you of impending danger. In business, travels. signs and regets. He warns you of impending dauger. [Mexico Two Republics:] Speaking of primitive law among the Mexican Indians brings to mind a most curious case that was told to me some years ago in the State of Oaxaca by an old Zapoteca chief, who had become a convert to Christianity. He said that a long while ago an American botanist was traveling through the mountains o Oaxace studying the rare and beautiful flora of that region. He had with him a mozo from another part of the country.

They knew that he was a harmless and good man, because he loved flowers. All Mexican Indians love flowers. So they took the body to the chief and told him what they had seen and found. The old chief was very indignant. "What," said he, "shall the kind stranger with the white face who loved flowers and sought not our goods nor insulted our women come to such dog's death among us and not be nor insulted our women come to such a dog's death among us and not be avenged?"

He then dispatched four swift Indian runners in different directions, with orders not to return without the murderer. After a week's time they returned, bearing the malefactor bound in their midst. A council of old men was called. The case was examined. The guilt of the mozo wes proved, as he still had with him the strange pieces of gold.

Then the chief gave the sentence. It was speedily performed. They led the trembling murderer to the center of the little plaza. There four green stakes were driven in the ground. The murderer was stripped naked and stretched by the wrists and feet in the air among the four stakes, to which he was lashed. Then the Indiens made a great heap of unslaked lime under the wretched man's body, and when the heap touched his breast and sides they poured water over it until the scalding steam of the burning lime had cooked all the flesh from the bones. Then they took the bones and threw them into a hole on the mountain side. And so was the stain of the murdered man's blood covered and vengeance was wrought by the Indians in behalf of "the white stranger who was good and loved flowers."

[Globe, Ariz., Times:] Florence Packard, who lives in Greenback Val-Packard, who lives in Greenback Val-ley, Gila county, Ariz, has a remark-able record as a hunter of mountain llons. He has killed scores of them, and last year alone his record was thirty-three scalps. The mountain llons of Arizona are most destructive to herds of horses and cattle. The risk of life and difficulties attending their destruction have caused the llons ago in the State of Oaxaca by an old Zapoteca chief, who had become a convert to Christianity. He said that a long while ago an American botanist was traveling through the mountains of Oaxace studying the rare and beautiful flora of that region. He had with him a mozo from another part of the country.

He carried several gold pieces sewed in the lining of his jacket. The mozo became aware of the fact, and one day when the botanist got down on his knees to drink at a little spring, the mozo cut his head off with a machete, took the gold pieces and fied to the higher Sierras.

Packard says he has frequently followed this dog over fifteen miles before the lion was found. Up to this date seventy-one lion scalps are to the credit of this dog. The dog is not a fast trailer, but very careful, and, considering the roughness of the country, the dog is very remarkable.

The bears are the shyest of all game. Having poor eyes and good ears, the least noise drives them off a good ways. It may surprise some hunters to know that a 22-rifier is used by Packard for killing these animals. Teacher Who Was Unhorsed.

[New York Sun:] During the annual examinations of the West Point cadets in the month of June, 1858, Gen. Grant was a visitor to his alma mater. In the evenings he spent an hour or two in the rooms of the board of visitors. Gen. Pitcher, who was the superintendent of the post, and three of the board of visitors had been cadets when Grant was a cadet, so there were many good "schoolboy days" stories told by them. One evening one of the officers of the post told this story on himself:

"It was before the war," said the instructor. "I was giving the 'plebes' their first lesson on horseback. I saw that many of them looked shaky. Indeed, I do believe that a few of them had never been in the saddle before. They were lined up just off the carriage way near the library building, and there was a line of carriages there with the anxious friends and relatives to thoses got ugly. You know what a twest Point horse is always—ever ready to make a plunge.

"Now, gentlemen, said I, 'don't feel nervous. All you've got to do is to sty firmly erect in your saddles, keep your knees 'tightly pressed to the horses' sides, and no horse in the world will ever get the best of you.'

"Well there was, doubtless, in the sight of those youngsters the personification of a horseman. While talking to them my horse danced about and did all sorts of gymnastics, and there."

Everybody in the room roared. Even the story-teller had to smile. "Do you know what the effect of it all was?" ended the officer. "Those boys for the four years they were here after that, before they graduated, wouldn't believe a damned word I said on, any subject!"

Thursday evening the Capitol Building Commissioners announced that Tom Lovell, a contractor from Denton, Tex., will be given the contract for building the new Capitol. The commissioners were not prepared to announce the character of the material to be used in the basement, and superstructure, having the choice of three different kinds, either one of which, however, was lower according to Mr. Lovell's figures than any of the other bidders. The figures submitted by the various bidders are well within the limit of $100,000 placed upon the building by the Legislature. The rotunda and stairway of the structure are to be fire-proof, constructed in a fire-proof manner or on part of it, and the figures submitted were on this basis. After opening the bids, however, the commissioners concluded to ask for figures on the fire-proof construction of part of the building. The matter of choosing the material for the building will be left until Mr. Lovell returns from his home in Denton, but the probability is that a granite base and a tufa superstructure will be chosen. Tufa is a grayish-white stone of volcanic origin, cacpable of being wrought into artistic conceptions. Denton's figures for the construction of the Capitol of this material, without fire-proofing, was, in round numbers, $88,000. Joseph Fifield, a builder and contractor of this city, was shosen today as superintendent of the building.

All the pupils in the Union High School have been vaccinated. They were lined up and one by one operated upon by a physician secured for the purpose. Plans have been completed for a new Congregational Church building at Tempe. It will cost $4000, and have a seating capacity of about three hundred.

Congregational Church building at Tempe. It will cost $4000, and have a seating capacity of about three hundred.

There has been almost an open rebellion by the members of Co. B, National Guard. A few days ago a number of the privates served a petition upon the captain, requesting him to resign. The latter was prepared for the move and presented formal discharge papers to a number of the more prominent objectors. The controversy has not ended here, however, as charges against the captain have been formally prepared by other privates and a courtmartial may result in due time.

M. L. Raymond, a Rough Rider who enlisted from New Mexico, died in this city yesterday in pitiable circumstances. He drifted into this city one day last week, destitute, but was temporarily provided for by other members of the regiment living here. He left on Sunday or Monday, however, and was next heard of at Maricopa Junction, where he had crawled under a lot of railroad ties thrown together in a temporary fashion. It was raining at the time, and Raymond was down with a fever contracted in Cuba. He was removed to this city yesterday morning, but died during the course of the afternoon. The parents of the deceased live in Oftumwa, Iowa, and were notified of his death, but are not able of have the body shipped to that place. Raymond will, accordingly, be buried by the local Rough Riders. Ben Hanson, who was held here on suspicion of being wanted in Wyoming, turns out to be an innocent man. A' photograph has been received from the Wyoming authorities of the party wanted, and he bears no resemblance trin to Washington, D. C., and other

"The only safeguard that I can sug-"The only safeguard that I can suggest to prevent to a great extent any attempt at landing plants without inspection, would be the enactment of a State law making it punishable by fine to bring into California any plants or trees without immediately notifying the quarantine officer of the State Board of Horticulture or the quarantine guardian of the district in which said plants or trees are received. As no penalty is attached to the violation of rule 1 of the regulations of this board it is practically a dead letter, although the Southern Pacific Railroad Company has rendered us very valuable service by keeping us advised of arrivals of trees and plants by rail from outside the State.

"The State Board of Horticulture un-keeping us advised of arrivals of trees and plants by rail from outside the State.

"The State Board of Horticulture under the power conferred upon it by section 5 of the act of March 8, 1889, adopted rules and regulations to prevent the introduction of insect pests and tree and plant diseases, but it had no power to attach a penalty, so in order to make such regulations effective, we will have to submit a bill to the Legislature, providing penalties for non-compliance. Unless, this can be done at the forthcoming session of the Legislature, we are liable to have the work done in this line during the past few years completely nullified in the future.

"Before presenting a bill for your consideration, I desire to mention a few of the more serious insect pests and tree diseases that have proved to be very injurious in other countries and States, and which we have no reason to believe will prove less destructive if introduced into California.

"Probably the most serious would be the introduction of the Gypsy moth from Massachusetts, Europe or Japan.

"The caterpillars of this moth devastate forest trees as well as fruit and ornamental trees and plants. The people of California would be up in arms if the State Board of Horticulture asked the Legislature for an appropriation of over $100,000 a year to fight a single pest as they are now doing in Massachusetts to try and stamp out this insect that was introduced into that State from Europe over twenty year ago.

this insect that was introduced into that State from Europe over twenty year ago.

"The 'peach yellow,' or the 'peach rosette,' it is claimed, would not spread in California, but the advice of eastern experts in tree diseases is to keep it out. Now a new peach disease, called 'small peaches,' is reported 'from Michigan, where 4000 acres are ctated to have been killed by it. A peach root aphis was introduced into Delaware, Virginia and Maryland probably from Australia.

Dr. E. F. Smith of the United States Department of Agriculture, reports having seen a nursery of 100,000 peach trees killed outright by this pest in three weeks' time. One shipment of 19,000 peach trees was brought into California. I found them to be infested with this pest, and the trees were destroyed. It also attacks plums and prunes.

"In Louisiana a species of 'saw fly' has made its appearance, which completely defoliates peach and prune trees.

"In Louisiana a species of 'saw fly' has made its appearance, which completely defoliates peach and prune trees.

"In about two years they kill an orchard effectually. Prof. H. A. Morgan of the experiment station, Baton Rouge, La., reports this pest as steadily becoming more numerous, until now it may be considered one of the worst enemies of the olum and peach trees of that State. The introduction of the plum curcullo would reduce the profits of prune, apricot, and cherry-growers.

"The fruit fly in Australia and the larcae or beetle, Dotlcus pestilens, in the same country, burrow all through the pulp of apples, completely ruining them. The peach fly, in the islands of Bermuda and a similar pest in Cape Colony, makes peach growing for profit impossible, as most seasons they have not enough peaches for local consumption.

IMPORTANT NOMINATIONS.

(A. P. EARLY MORNING REPORT.)

NEW YORK, Jan. 14.—A dispatch to the Tribune from Havana says:

"The most important nominations recently announced here are those of Mario Menocal as Chief of Police, Perfecto Lacosté as Alcalde or Mayor, and Fererico Mora as civil Governor. The latter is not so well known as the former, but he is satisfactory to the conservative Cubans and Spaniards. He was a member of the revolutionary junta in Havana during the insurrection. Menocal was commander of the insurgent troops in Havana and Matanzas provinces. His cooperation with the American military authorities has already been noted. His place will, in reality, be more than that of Chief of Rolice in the city. He will advise with Gen. Brooke and Gen. Lee in the formation of the rural police, and in other matters of policy and administration.

"Perfecto Lacoste, who is named as Alcalde, was the president of the Havana revolutionary junta, and now holds a similar place in the Junta Patriotica, which succeeds it.

"The 'teniente alcaldes' her teniente alcaldes' have fupctions analogous to those of assistant Mayor and Aldermen. One of them, Juan Barreire, is a professor in the university. Others were deported by Weyler to the penal settlement in Africa. Several of the Aldermen were also political exiles, and some served in the Insurgent army. The roorganization of this City Council was one of the most serious problems here.

one of the most serious problems here. The body was in disfavor. Several of its members were willing to stay and are disappointed that their resignations are disappointed that their resignations were accepted. Under a rule made in Washington, it will have nothing to do with the granting of franchises; its functions will be limited to municipal administration and the military authorities are hopeful that their own labors will be lightened. Gen. Menocal and others of the insurgent leaders first secured the consent of the assembly which represents the insurgent army so that no friction can arise from this, source.

"The appointments show the sin-cerity of the purpose to recognize the Cubans, and to give preference to those who fought in the insurrection, or who were identified with it. The Spanish classes take them philosophically, and say most of the men named are worthy. The radical insurgents who say most of the men named are worthy. The radical insurgents who are disappointed, have now to find fault with Menocal, and their own leaders, instead of with the Americans. "In the customhouse the plan of recognizing the insurgents has gone so far that other Cubans complain that their applications are pigeonholed without reading. Yesterday twenty-two officers of various grades in the insurgent army were given places under Collector Bliss. Most of them expected places corresponding to their rank. As the policy adopted in the customhouse is to begin at the biftom of the ladder and acquire experience before giving appointments as inspectors and appraisers, this could not be done. The insurgent officers combinined and two or three of them failed to report for duty. The others, though grumbling, were at their posts.

"Isolated instances of vandalism by American soldiers are causing complaints from keepers of cafes. They try to observe Gen. Ludlow's orders against selling alcoholic beverages to soldiers and are victims of resentment. All cases of this kind are vigorously punished, but the effect of a single case is bad. The Tenth and Eighth Infantry, which are encamped in the city, are behaving admirably.

"While the American officials are behaving admirably.

"While the American officials are getting along well with the Cubans, they continue to have differences among themselves. The latest trouble is over the sanitation of the customhouse. Col. Bliss wants to go ahead and cleanse it, but after work was started it was stopped because the method was not in accordance with Gen. Ludlow's general plan."

The church is rich in Havana and poor in other parts of the Island. The religious orders, especially those occupyligious orders, especially those occupy-ing the convents, are wealthy, but the parishes in the interior are poor.

MORGAN'S ESCAPE.

The Part That Was Played in it by

(New York, Sun:) The tunnel through which Gen. John Morgan, and his fel-low Confederate raiders made their escape from the Ohio penitentiary at Columbus at midnight on November 27, 1863, was discovered last Friday, and columbus at midnight on November 27, 1863, was discovered last, Friday, and it would seem to end the controversy which has existed ever since the escape as to whether Morgan got out by tunneling or by collusion with his jailers. An active, though at the time an unconscious, agent in Morgan's escape was W. H. Eckert, a brother of the president of the Western Union Telegraph Company, who has lived in New York for many years. Four or five years ago, when a man who was chief clerk to Quartermaster Burr during the war. published the statement that Morgan was liberated by Secretary Stanton's order, and that the tunnel story was a myth, Mr. Eckert told to the writer the story of his connection with Morgan's escape, which he had never made public before. Mr. Eckert was young at the time, and he was serving as a conductor on the fast express which left Columbus at 1:20 in the morning for Cincinnati. Shortly before his train pulled out on November 28 four men dressed as drovers arrived at the station, and asked him many questions about his train. Despite their dress they seemed to be somewhat higher in the social scale than drovers, but Mr. Eckert had no suspicion of their identity. When Mr. Eckert's train shot past Millcreek, at Cincinnati, these four jumped from the rear platform. Three men had been waiting for them, and the drovers, one of whom was injured, were carried away in a wagon. Mr. Eckert, on arriving in Cincinnati, went at once to the Burnet House to make up lost sleep. At 2 o'clock in the afternoon a dispatch from Gov. Tod reached him, which read as follows:

"Gen. Morgan and three of his staff escaped from 'the pentientlery last night. Did you have any suspicious-inoking persons on your train? Answer

"Gen. Morgan and three of his staff escaped from the pendientiary last night. Did you have any suspicious-looking persons on your train? Answer quickly."

"I realized then," said Mr. Eckert, in telling the story, "that my four drovers were the escaped prisoners. I was convinced later from what I learned of their escape that they dug their way free, and that there was no collusion with their keepers."

WASHINGTON'S DEATH

To Be Remembered By a Novel Funeral Observance.

[Washington Special, New York Evening Post:] The observance at Mount Vernon on the 14th of December, 1899 promises to be an event of rare interest. It is new, in this country at least, to celebrate the centonery. least, to celebrate the centenary of a man's death, and it is certainly for tunate in doing so to have so suggestive a time and place. There is something about Mount Vernon in midwinter peculiarly adapted for solemn and commemorative services. At no season in the year is the old estate more beautiful than in the middle of winter. ceautiful than in the middle of winter. Except on rare days the air there is mild and soft, and the view from the lawn much more impressive than when the trees are heavy with summer foliage. Mount Vernon is happily free from modern innovations, and without a violent stretch of the imagination one might fancy himself, projected back a hundred years. The view from the brow of the hill overlooking the Potomac is superb, and through the leafless trees of this season an uninterrupted stretch of the river for many miles may be seen. The pleasure-boats are in winter quarters; the noble river is as placid and free from craft of all kinds as on the day when George Washington died. The wharf for the steamboats which convey the tourists to the grounds is fortunately so placed behind a bend in the irver that it does not intrude upon the scene; and the troiley line which brings the visitors in winter, is so far on the other side of the grounds that none of the artificiality of clanging bells and broomstick-cars interferes with the quiet and natural ness of the place.

Without any actual funeral services there will be much in the scene at Except on rare days the air there is mess of the place.

Without any actual funeral services there will be much in the scene at Mount Vernon on the anniversary day to suggest them. The river, sky, the day fading on the scene while the services, which will begin at 3 o'clock, are still in progress, cannot but call up vividly the occasion which it is desired to commemorate. It is a remarkable coincidence that the first suggestion of the observance next year abould come from the Grand Lodge of Masons of the State of Colorado, and that the first acceptance of the invitation to participate from Masons in foreign lands should have come from the lodges of New Zealand. Colorado and New Zealand were places of which eign lands should have come from the lodges of New Zealand. Colorado and New Zealand were places of which George Washington knew little. Of the latter he could have known only that Capt. Cook, in 1769, had been the first European to set foot on its shores, and had taken formal possession of the country in the name of King George III. But the ferocity and cannibalism of its natives had made the island a terror to sailors. This was all the progress New Zealand had made up to 1799. Of Colorado, as we now understand the term, Washington could have known nothing. As a State it made its way into the Union just a century after the signing of the Declaration of Independence, which he did so much to make valid. Colorado and New Zealand would have struck him as strangely as it would strike us if, in 1965, when the centenary of Abraham Lincoin's death may be celebrated, the orator of the occasion should come from the very island of the Philippines which Spain has been least able to subdue, and the poet of the day from a populous city in the middle kingdom of China.

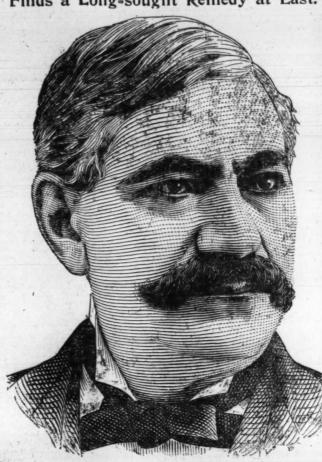

Clothed the Mummics.

[Modern Mexico:] One of the sights that has always interested tourists who stopped over at the delightfully unmodernized city of Guanajuato is the catacombs beneath the cemetery. Vaults in the thick wall of the panteon are sold for a term of years, and if at the end of the period the lease is not renewed, the bones of the departed are thrown into the common heap in the underground corridors. The dry, rare air of Guanajuato has, during the last 100 years, mummified the remains of many, and instead consigning these to the general pile, they have been stood up against the walls of the passages, grim sentinels of death in death's abode. Many people visit the place out of curiosity, and the authorities recently decided that these nummies were an immortal sight. They have accordingly had white gowns made for them, and the watchers now keep their silent vigils modestly attired. Clothed the Mummies.

EGYPT OVER AGAIN.

UNCLE SAM MIGHT PROFIT BY JOHN BULL'S BLUNDERS.

Englishmen Think Americans Do no Know Their Own Minds as to Their New Cares.

AMERICAN CONTROL OF PHILIP PINES FAVORED BY EUROPE.

Germany's Attitude is Friendly in All Respects-Even Spain Falls in Line-Encouraging News from Manila.

IBY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.1 NEW YORK, Jan. 14 .- [Exclusive Dispatch.] The Tribune's London special says: "Washington debates special says: and dispatches from Manila are com mented upon here as evidence that Americans do not yet know their own minds respecting the new care upon which they have entered with reluctance. Englishmen with their own experience fresh in memory, see Egypt writ large in Cuba and the Philip pines. If they had their own work to do over again on the Nile there would no pledges, no scuttling from Soudan, no futile attempt to evade the responsibility of empire forced upon them in the interest of civilization.

"It is easy to read betwen the line of the leaders in the London press the conviction of the writers that the Americans are in danger of repeating English sentimental blunders, Observers who have made the closest study of the Philippine problem believe that the dangers of the situation there are exaggerated, but perwith the natives increases with each day's delay in the ratification of the treaty. Veteran Indian officials smile grimly over the sensativeness displayed by Carnegie and Bryan over the political fortunes of the hybrid East Indian races, which are incapable of self government. What practical Englishmen cannot understand is the plea that pledges should be incorporated with the treaty, when there is no accurate knowledge of the capacity of the Malay races for ruling themselves, and not the slightest necessity for making them. advice would be, 'Ratify the treaty make no pledge, such as has ham pered us in Egypt, and find out by actual experience what should be done Don't load yourselves up with conscience clauses when no European power holds you responsible.'

The New York 'Tribune's Berlin rable says: "What cannot fail to interest Americans is the remark made by Emperor William, which reaches the Tribune correspondent from unim-The personag with whom the Emperor was talking was unable to retain his surprise at the Emperor's indifference to Enzland's attitude at Fashoda, and his apparent apathy to events in Eu-The Emperor, noticing this, said: 'I care very little about what is going on in Africa. Even in Europe matters are thrown completely in the background by events in the East. I am convinced that it is there that German commercial prosperity is to be developed. My heart is set upon this. It was for this reason that I secured the ninety-nine years' lease of Kiau-Chau. What is now going on in the Philippines and elsewhere in the Far East, I consider to be of the ntmost importance to Germany.'

"It is owing to these views of Emperor William that in diplomatic circles here the idea gains ground that ded property in the Philippines, the United States may be absolutely sure that no opposition will be offered by Spain to the establishment of Ameri can authority throughout the archipelago as speedily as possible, because this is felt to be their only salvation. "In official and financial circles in Paris, opinion is unanimous that it would now be absolutely unworthy of the United States to shirk its responsibility toward the civilized world by abandoning the Philippines to anarchy, and that all the powers, including Germany, will hold aloof unless the United States utterly fails to provide accurity for the lives and property of foreigners established in the archipelago, thereby allowing the Philippines, to become an Asiatic Cuba. In this case, it is firmly believed fore. can authority throughout the archithis case, it is firmly believed here that Germany would interfere at Manila, for the same reasons that the United States intervened at Havana."

GERMANY'S ATTITUDE. [ASSOCIATED PRESS DAY REPORT.] BERLIN, Jan. 14.—The Ambassador iere of the United States, in an interview with a correspondent of the Associated Press, said that the whole durry of indignation in the two untries is just as baseless this year as last, and may even be more base-as last, and may even be more baseless. He said:

"In my judgment it emanates entreely from a small number of people who seek to fish in troubled waters. As a matter of fact, Germany knows and shows that she knows her only true policy in the East is to remain on good terms with the United States. She has no earthly motive to take the side of the Spaniards or the insurgents, or to stif them up.
That there are some Germans at States. She has no earthly motive to take the side of the Spaniards or the insurgents, or to stir them up.

That there are some Germans at of 1300 men, of whom fully 1000 are re-

Hongkong and elsewhere who think they do not like Americans is just as true as that there are some Americans there and elsewhere who do no like Germans. But such gentlemen direct neither the policy of our State Department, nor that of the German Foreign Office. The relations of our country and Germany were perfectly harmonious during the war, and since the war the Germans have acquiesced to our suggestions. They saw from the beginning how the war was to end, and they accepted the situation cordially. So far from quarreling at this late day over Pacific possessions, they are more and more inclined to work with us in the extension of com-merce and civilization. Only about a week ago they telegraphed to their consular representative at Hollo on no account to land any force for the protection of the Spaniards, but to leave the matter to the Americans.

"Respecting the meat question, there is every reason to believe that the new condition of things will be much more favorable to the United States than the old condition."

The Cologne Gazette this morning publishes an inspired article explaining the alleged injustice of the Amerian imputation against Germany, con-cluding with saying: "The German government does not fight with its visor down. But besides, in view of the fact that German industry neces-sarily needs the American market it would be incredibly foolish to indulge would be incredibly foolish to indulge in a policy of hostility toward the American people."

ENCOURAGING NEWS.

[ASSOCIATED PRESS DAY REPORT.] WASHINGTON, Jan. 14.-The Wa Department officials were very much encouraged today upon the receipt of news from Gen. Otis at Manila that ndicated a distinct improvement the situation there. The general's dispatch completely negatives the al surd story from Madrid that the American troops at Manila have mutined and refuse to proceed to Iloilo necessitating the withdrawal of Gen. Miller's forces from that port. Gen. Otis' is master wherever he has planted his foot and undoubtedly is able to carry out any policy as to the treatment of the natives the administration is likely to dictate. There are indications that encourage the officials here to believe the conciliatory policy toward the natives that was recently made will succeed, although it canno be expected of the Filipinos to be convinced at once of the absolute faith in which Gen. Otis is acting toward

It is also suggested that he may be sent to Spain either as Minister, or on a special errand.

THE STORY OF HOW MR. SLATER'S SHOES CAME BACK.

Field With Another Man-Three Suspicious Characters Sent to Jail-Telegrams to Senator Simpson That He Has Supported Bulls

PASADENA, Jan. 14.-[Regular Correspondence.] The population of Pasadena was reduced three tonight, and the police think they have ridded the town of a trio of dangerous characters. During the early part of the winter the sneaks and house-crackers had things pretty much their own way, but now i is turn-about and the officers of the law are having considerable success in lassooing them.

On the 2d day of December, W. R. Shater, who works on the Phillips ranch in the southeastern part of the city, telephoned to the City Marshal that his room in a barn had been entered, and a pair of shoes, a razor and other ar-ticles of small value had been stolen. He paid little attention to the loss and probably would not have reported it if he had not just then seen his shoes walking across the very field where he was at work, on the feet of a hobo. He was so shocked to see his old friends in such bad company that he almost lost his breath for a moment. He did not dare to tackle the man with the shoes, he said, for he was an ugiy looking chap and in the company of another burly tramp; so he telephoned to police headquarters and the Marshal went down to the ranch on his wheel. The fellows had gone well out of sight then and it was impossible to trace them.

Mr. Slater did not dream that he would ever see the thief again, but he caught sight of him this afternoon on South Marengo avenue and promptly notified the Marshal, who made a hot He paid little attention to the loss and caught sight of him this affection on South Marengo avenue and promptly notified the Marshal, who made a hot spurt for the locality and after getting his bearings from the complainant, tracked the hobe down the Santa Fé tracked the nobe down the state I track and overhauled him near the Raymond station. Under the name of Henry Hanson, the fellow was arraigned before Justice Riamroth this afternoon. He could not give a good account of himself, but claimed that he had swapped shoes with another traveler the night before his arrest, and they hurt his feet, so he was wearing them on his back. The court sentenced him to jail for sixty days. The police believe he is the tramp that has been sleeping in an unoccupied house on South Moline avenue and terrifying the neighbors. He is about 40 years old, well-informed, quick-witted and versed in the ways of courts.

The two other dangerously-clever people, who were sent down tonight, gave the names of Mike Wilson and George Emerson. They are boys of 19 or 20 years, who claim to hail from San Francisco. Both had Just graduated from the Los Angeles jail when they came to Pasadena last evening. Wilson is the tail brunette, with a patch over his eye, who hit another prisoner over the head with a shovel while at work in the chain gang, not long ago. Day before yesterday they both were picked up on the street in Los Angeles by an officer on suspicion of being connected with the theft of some clothing. There was no evidence against them, and after being detained a while, they were released from custoday, with orders to leave town.

They got into trouble here today by offering to sell a man in a lumber yard a coat and vest. When arrested subsequently, they had no extra coats and vests about them, and after being detained a while, they were released from custoday, with orders to leave town.

The goods found on Kelley were in evidence, and he was recognized by Mr. Phillips as a man he had seen prowling about the premises. The City Marshal of Santa Monica was needed to complete the chain of witnesses, however, and as he was not able to be present today, the case was continued till Thursday. Kelley means to fight and has employed counsel.

CATALINA ISLAND. A Botanist's Discoveries—Inmates o

Aquarium Perish. AVALON, Jan. 14.—[Regular Correspondence.] Almost the only familiar face that Prof. Spaulding, the botanist of Ann Arbor University, has found in the flora of Santa Catalina Island is a lone dogwood tree, and it is said to be the only one of its kind on the island. the only one of its kind on the island. Nor is it entirely familiar, for, while the leaf and bark are similar to those of eastern growth, the branches are long and drooping. Learning of the location of this tree, Prof. Spaulding and wife, and Mrs. Sarvin, with Miss Lauterback, the artist, as guide, made a pilgrimage to the spot yesterday, climbing mountains and threading almost impassable cafions to reach it. The professor collected a large number of strange and interesting growths, which he brought home with him. One specimen, however, he did not bring. It was the giant root of the megarrhiza or chill cajote, as the natives call it, which the flood had washed from its position. It was as large as a barrel and had the appearance of a large turnip. It belongs to the gourd family and attains an immense size, weighing hundreds of pounds. This is one of the curious adaptations of rature to preserve life in a dry country, as it stores up sufficient moisture in its big fleshy root to support it for an indefinite period of drought.

The aquarium, which had become an object of great interest and solicitude, has come to grief. It was not protected from the rain during the recent storm, and the fresh water has killed nearly all the animal life. The tank will have to be emptied, and the work of restocking gone over with again.

W. A. Tade of Bonaparte, Iowa, a brother of Rev. O. A. Tade, pastor of the island church, arrived yesterday for an extended visit in California.

'If one required confirmatory evidence of the heavy rainfall on the island, they need only go into some of the cafions which lead down from the mountains to the sea. Nearly all these cafions had tralls up them, but since the rain some of them have scarcely a trace of a trail left in them. The wash seems to have spread all over the bottoms, great gulches are furrowed out, and, in places, cascades and impassable falls have been formed, where before was no evidence of rocks or falls. The underbrush shows that the water was six or eight feet deep and two-tion Nor is it entirely familiar, for, while the leaf and bark are similar to those to Work for the Canal-His Views of the Situation-Real Estate Market Improving-City Official Salaries-Coronado Notes.

SAN DIEGO, Jan 14.—[Regular Carrespondence.] The selection of H. P. Wood as Southern California's representative in Washington for furthering the interests of the Nicaragua Canal is regarded here as the best one that could have been made. Mr. Wood's per-sonal relations with many Senators and Representatives are of the pleasantest; he is able to speak from a per sonal knowledge of the route of the canal, having spent six months in that country for the especial purpose of studying conditions there; and he is thoroughly posted upon Hawaiian matters, having been a resident there for rears, and as Hawaiian Consul here n close touch with the leading men of years, and as Hawaiian Consul here in close touch with the leading men of that country.

Mr. Wood is now arranging his affairs so as to leave for Washington. He is a close friend of Senator John T. Morgan, and when Senator Morgan was at Hotel del Coronado last spring Mr. Wood secured valuable data that will be of use in aiding the canal project.

"It believe other representatives are also to be sent from Southern California," said Mr. Wood last night. "The idea of the Southern California," said Mr. Wood last night. "The idea of the Southern California Nicaragua Canal Association is to encourage interest in the canal in other communities throughout the country, and this will probably follow, with the result that members of Congress, noting this expression of the commercial bodies from all parts of the United States, will be more likely to give the canal proposition deliberate consideration.

"It was hoped that Gen. It is not the particular desire of those inter-ested to show the need of Southern Cal-ifornia for the canal, but its desirability from a national standpoint."

REAL ESTATE MARKET. "The real estate market is rapidly improving," said a leading dealer this morning. "The assurance of good crops, the new steamship line, and a heavy travel from the east this winter are the leading causes for improvement. The choice residence portion of the city is feeling the improvement more than any other section. There have been a number of transfers of orange and lem-on properties during the next week, but number of transfers of orange and lemon properties during the past week, but we hardly look for any decided activity in that field for some time. The lecture revealed the many beauties of the canon in a very satisfactory manner, giving one a good idea of the stupendous masses of rock, the wast spaces involved, and the splendid colors resulting from the washing of many strata.

AZUSA, Jan. 14.—[Regular Correspondence.] Something like a year ago a number of prominent citizens made up their minds to secure a plant for opportunities secured by the when certain rights were granted to when certain rights were granted to the San Gabriel Electric Power Company. It was then the intention to organize a company to carry the work on until the town should be incorporated, when the plant should be turned over to the incorporation at cost. A corporation was organized for this purpose, and the subscriptions for stock became popular, practically amounting to the lighting of the town by the people themselves. In carrying out this project, a contract has just been let to George W. Taylor for the construction of the plant, and he will begin the work at once. Since the organization of the company, the city has been incorporated, and the Trustees will now make some provision for the lighting of the streets, though it may be some time before they will see their way to making the plant a feature of the municipal government.

Motor at Potencia-Notes.

REDONDO, Jan. 14. [Regular Correspondence.] Yesterday the ocean was rough, and the tides high. There was all the grandeur of the scene presented on Thursday without the unpleasant elements of danger and damage. No further destruction has been wrought elements of danger and damage. No further destruction has been wrought at this point, but reports reached here yesterday of the wrecking of the pier at Potencia, about two miles up the coast from Redondo, where the Wright wave motor has been in operation. It is said that about thirty feet of the wharf has been washed away, but the amount of damage done to the motor itself is not known. It is probabel however, that if as much of the pier has been destroyed as reported, the motor apparatus could not escape without serious damage.

An evidence of prosperity is to be seen here in the force of men from the Sunset Telephone Company, who are putting up lines and installing helio machines in the homes of several of Redondo's prosperous farmers. With a 'phone at their houses the rural residents can now communicate with Los Angeles and other points, as conveniently as though living in the city. Redondo will be the central of these country extensions.

There were a number of golf enthusiasts from Los Ageles on the hotel links today.

The steamer Corona arrived from San Diego this morning.

Now that the weather is pleasant again, anglers are taking to the wharves, and some very good catches are reported.

HOW TO ACCOMPLISH OUR MISSION,

AN'S needs are often God's opportunities, the time when he hews out the grand highways of advancement wherein the nations may walk to attain to nobler ends. Results are often different from what we anticipate. Moral forces enter into the great conflicts of life that work vital changes and unexpected results; yet when the strife is ended we see how natural it is that the unexpected has occurred, and how the whole vast trend of occurrences pointed to the end which was finally reached.

How true is it that no substantial progress is made in the affairs of this life without battling. The evils that beset municipalities and States and whole peoples must needs be met with strong moral weapons to overcome them. The community that does battle for the right is always stronger after the conflict than when beginning its warfare upon evil. Moral force gathers strength from action, and man is great only as a warrior fighting the powers of evil and seeking to overcome the wrong. America will be far stronger in the twentieth century than she has been in the present one, not because she has conquered a "dying nation," and has been instrumental in the collapse of its colonial empire, but because she has heroically battled for the cause of humanity, and lifted her arm to maintain the inalienable rights of the race.

But still there are other battles left for us to fight, other triumphs that we must win before we shall be safe—a strong nation able to overcome all of the many dangers that beset us. Politically we are not wholly pure, nor honest, nor upright. While the higher places of power and political trust may be bought or bartered for gold, or for influence, and the sacredness of the ballot is not duly regarded, we are not safe. While men with no moral principle, no respect for law, no desire for anything higher than the gratification of their own ambitions, dare aspire to the highest places within the gift of the people, fearless of rebuke, there is something that is rotten in our political system that threatens danger to the very life and spirit of our political freedom.

It cannot be denied that while we as a people have made noble advancement along certain lines, we are along other lines degenerating, and are proving ourselves to be, in some respects, unworthy of the grandeur of our past.

The struggle for office was never more unscrupulous or more determined than it is today, and in many cases the fitness for the same is in no wise as seriously considered as it should be Where this is the case, and unfit men are elected, the machinery of the government must suffer and its integrity and strength be greatly impaired. We cannot hope that good will come out of evil, or that men who are totally unfitted for legislative trusts will legislate wisely upon the most important questions that concern our life as a nation.

As a people we should recognize these evils and promptly set about the work of remedying them. We should lay the ax at the very root of this wrong by placing our standard high as we choose the men who are to serve us, and we should never forget that the warfare of this nation should be directed, not against tyranny alone, but also against political dishonesty and the prostitution of high place and power for selfish and unworthy ends

We have a past that is rich in the wealth of noble deeds and immortal names, and also in the blessing of Divine Providence, and we owe it to Almighty God that we remember His goodness to us, and seek, for the glory of His name, to maintain good government, just laws and our political uprightness as a people whom He has signally blessed, and whom in the future He may wish to employ as one of the great instruments in His hands for the fulfillment of His most gracious purposes toward the race.

This ceaseless warfare between good and evil is as old as the race, and it must be fought out until the good is triumphant. Every man in the nation has a part in this battle. Responsibility rests with the individual no less than with the body politic, and each man should remember that he has a personal duty to discharge, and that he must fulfill it boldly, unhesitatingly and without fear or favor. Then will the blessing of the God of nations be upon us, and our power and influence as a strong, enlightened and Christian nation will wax greater as time passes, while our mission as a liberty-loving and Christian people will be nobly fulfilled.

MUNICIPAL SOCIALISM.

HE greed and official corruption which have too often characterized the conduct of municipal governments in the United States, have led to various experiments having in view the avoidance of such evils and the promotion of the public good. In some of these experiments there has been a decided tendency to delegate to individuals and boards of management, certain fundamental powers which are inherent in the theory and practice of popular sovereignty, upon which the whole structure of our free government

The cities of Boston and Haverhill, in Massa chusetts, are at the present time experimenting along certain lines of "municipal reform," which verge closely upon what may properly be termed municipal socialism. The outcome of these experiments will be watched with keen interest by political economists, sociologists, and thinking people generally, in all sections of the country.

The contract system of competition for work to be performed by a municipality has its evils. Corrupt city officials may receive "inducements" for the letting of contracts, and contractors may unite to divide up the proceeds, but the city inva riably reserves the right to reject any and all bids, and to let the contract to the lowest bidder, a guarantee being deposited for the faithful performance of the work. The city has also the right to refuse to accept any work that is not performed according to contract, and has the full power to investigate prices paid for labor and material, and to satisfy itself that the demands of contractors are not exorbitant.

In the two cities mentioned, it is now proposed to abolish this sort of competition, and to pay a rate of compensation to the individual laborer nearly 20 per cent. in excess of the ordinary daily wage received in private work of the same character, with no responsibility for the faithful execution of the work, other than that of the superintendency of the heads of the various city departments. An army of paid overseers is thus necessitated. The purchase of all material for this work is also vested in the heads of departments. The power of the individual "pull" of the politician and the avenue opened for corruption may thus be infinitely increased, and the unfortunate person who happens to be the owner of property may be taxed ad libitum to foot the bills.

A municipal printing plant that employs "union labor" only is another feature of the government of Boston, and union labor to be amployed in all city work is the plan proposed in Haverhill. In the latter city the poor are to be relieved of providing food and clothing for school children, are to be furnished land, seed and tools, rented or purchased by the city government for their use free of cost; and when they have nothing else to do, they are to work upon the construction of city bicycle paths, through all the roads and thorougfares, and upon the improvement of the highways.

The only man to be distrusted, oppressed and condemned, according to the theory of municipal socialism, is he who by his industry and energy has removed himself from the rank of "the poor.' It is tacitly agreed that the vast bureaucracy that is to give to the trades unions the powers held by the guilds in the "free cities" of 500 years ago, that were able to defy the will of the nation for their own individual advantage, are composed of angelic and far-sighted men, with no greed of gain, with a perfect understanding of social evils and remedies, and completely divested of all impulses to use their despotic power for their personal profit or their political aggrandizement.

Professing the utmost abhorrence of corporations, municipal socialism transfers to the most formidable and powerful sort of corporation the care, not of the general good alone, which is the proper province of the State or municipality, but the care of the individual good of its citizens. The more complicated the machinery of state, the vaster its bureaucratic organization, the less restricted its powers of dealing with private interests, the more crushing is its force and the wider its divergence from the theory of Anglo-Saxon liberty.

The "anti-imperialist" who makes his lair in Boston, and who lifts up his zoice against the extension of the territory of the United States, would do well to look at home and investigate the imperialism which he is fostering. Autocratic power in the city or State tends to autocratic privileges for the functionaries representing those powers. There is but one step from populism to State paternalism; and thence to despotism the road is broad and alluring. That government which allows the greatest liberty to individual effort, places the fewest limitations on human achievement and proclaims that virtue and industry are the ideal attributes of the citizen, is the most truly democratic.

All right-minded men must approve any effort for the improvement in the condition of the worthy poor. No right-minded man can believe that the industrious and provident should be compelled to divide their substance with the idle and intemperate, the chronic tramp and loafer. Caring for the poor is one thing, fostering poverty is entirely different. The tendency of the times is centralization in cities, and it will continue until that immigration of the foreign city element, which comprises the largest percentage of "the city poor," are convinced that neither the city, the State, nor the world, owes them any living other than that for which they are willing to work honestly in open competition with all other labor.

With all the necessities and luxuries of life at one-half the price they were forty years ago, and with all agricultural labor bringing more reward than it did at that time, discontent is widely disseminated, and this is largely through the evil propaganda of those would-be reformers who make their living by their cant, or of those honester men who cannot understand that the process of industrial evolution is necessarily slow, and that they cannot appreciably hasten the millennium. Every system of government must depend upon individuals to carry out its schemes. To relegate to a certain class of individuals the autocratic regulation of the individual affairs of the community, is the most certain step toward centralized despotism and a blow at the sovereignty of the people.

FAMOUS ARTIST'S STRUGGLE UPWARD.

ROM Fifteenth street, facing Livingston Place, there is one of the prettiest views in all New York. To the north are the red brick buildings of the religious society of Friends, and beyond the old rengious society of Friends, and beyond the old stone church of St. George. In an imposing old-style house commanding this view lives the famous artist, William M. Chase, and in his drawing-room I talked with him the other day regarding his early struggles

The walls of the parlors are hung with many of the paintings which made Mr. Chase's working rooms in the old Studio building, in Tenth street, the show place of New York for nearly twenty years. There is the portrait of Carroll Beckwith, the Lady in White, and beautiful Mrs. Chase watching her children at play in the broad hall of the summer house in the Shinnecook bills.

"Whatever success I may have attained," said Mr. Chase, "comes from my love of art for art's sake only. I always wanted to be an artist, and I came to be one this way: My father owned a general store in Williamsburg, Ind. You know what a general store is. He kept everything and sold to farmers and village people.
"When I was about sixteen he went up to Indiana.

"When I was about sixteen, he went up to Indianapolis and started the largest shoe store in that city. One part of it was separated from the rest and devoted to ladies. It was carpeted. It was the first ladies' shoe store in the West. One day my father came to me and said: "William, you have spolled wrapping paper enough here. Put on your hat and come with me. I'm going to take you up to Hayes."

"On our way to the artist's rooms he explained to me regretfully, how sorry he felt that his endeavors to make a business man of me had failed; that he hadn't much hope or faith in my art predilections, but was willing to give me a chance, and he thought that a studio was a better place for that chance than a shoe store, and thus I began my studies with B. F. Hays, the artist, in his studio next to the old postoffice.

"Mr. Hays set me to work copying things which were of no earthly advantage to me as an art student. For instance, he had me copy in oil, a steel engraving of one of Rosa Bonheur's pictures. After I had been with him for a year or so, however, he did do me a genuine service. He advised my father to send me to New York.

"I came to this city with several letters of introduction to wholesale shoe dealers, who were requested to keep a kindly watch over me, and another letter to the late J. O. Eaton, a western artist, who had attained considerable reputation in the metropolis. I went into Mr. Eaton's studio and upon his advice I entered the Na-

There are a number of them now up around Yonkers, which I would like to recall. I was so successful that by Christmas I had saved up enough money to go to St. Louis, where my father had reëstablished himself in business, and I decided, after looking over the field, to open a studio in that city.

"Now in every large city that I have ever been in, there are one or more men, who feel a personal interest in art. They are natural art patrons. I met two such men in St. Louis. One of them was named Hodges and the other was Samuel Dodd. They were both very wealthy. One day I overheard them talking in my studio about me.

'What do you think we had better do?' said Mr.

Hodges.

"Send him abroad,' answered Mr. Dodd.
"We'll get commissions for him to be executed on the other side, and we will have the money advanced to him for his studies."

"We'il get commissions for him to be executed on the other side, and we will have the money advanced to him for his studies.'
"When this plan was laid before me, I very willingly gave up my studio and went to Munich, where I entered the academy of which the great Piloti was the director. I took with me several hundred dollars and I filled every commission according to promise. The most expensive commission was for D. A. Cole, one of the best-known collectors in the West. He had advanced $150. The picture I painted for him is now in the Widener collection in Philadelphia. If I had to do it over again I would not do it for ten times that much.

"After entering the academy I had a pretty hard time of it. I foresaw that my money would be spent long before I had acquired the requisite training, and try as hard as I might, I could not sell my work to the local dealers. I had been more or less of a revolutionist in the school. I had objected to painting pictures to order, and it was not the way of the master.

"At last I got down to bread and cheese. Even my canvas and my paints were supplied by my fellow students. I had been in Munich two years and a half. I had worked hard and conscientiously. I had been unable to sell anything. I had received, it is true, the highest medal given by the academy in each class, but I had been severely criticised by the teachers for my independence and the dealers would have nothing to do with me. I know what despair means."

The artist rose to his feet, waked across the room and looked out of the window where the maid was bringing home his child from their morning walk.

"It was the turning point in my life. I don't know how much longer I could have kept up the struggle. I was fortunate in having secured quarters with some people who had confidence in me—sufficient confidence to let me owe them two years' reni—out I could not have held out very much longer, and I knew it. It was then that I painted my first successful picture. It came about this way: I painted a study of a woman in bl

My reputation was made. The dealers who refused to notice me, crowded my studio and asked for paintings, studies, anything that I had. The seal of approval had been set by the highest authority of his day. I had money—Piloti's money—and I was independent, so I told these dealers 'No,' to go away, to let me alone, that I would have nothing to do with them. I paid my rent. I walked on air. The whole world looked bright. There was sunlight everywhere.

"I won't tell you how I painted these portraits or what has become of them, for that has nothing to do with the matter we are talking about. A curious sequel, however, to this little slege of the Bavarian art dealers, came to pass only last month. Let me tell you about it. One of the dealers had in his store a portrait of a girl smoking a pipe, by Wilhelm Leibl, even at that time a famous painter. I enjoyed studying this picture more than almost any other in Munich, and it occurred to me that so long as my work was in demand I would exchange some of my pictures for it so that I could study it at my leisure in my own studio. I gave three studies of heads in exchange for it.

that so long as my work was in demand I would exchange some of my pictures for it so that I could study it at my leisure in my own studio. I gave three studies of heads in exchange for it.

"Now at the Stuart art sale last year one of Leibl's pictures sold for $15,000. About a month ago the art dealer who arranged the trade in Munich more than twenty years ago, wrote to me asking whether I still had this picture, and if so, whether I would sell it. I replied that I had it, and did not care to dispose of it. In answer to this I received a letter asking me to put my own price upon the canvas. This was a different matter. So I wrote to my old-time friends, telling them that if they would send their agent to me with $2000 I would part with the picture, never thinking that my offer would be accepted. But they cabled their acceptance and they've got the picture now, and I don't know whether to be sorry or glad."

"How did Piloti happen to ask you to paint his children's portraits? I thought you said he was a severe critic of yours," I suggested.

"It was not wholly my study of the Woman in Black, as I afterward learned, because, although the great painter was a very harsh critic, he had a rather high idea of my ability, which I possibly did not deserve. I'll give you an illustration. I told you how I resented the method of manufacturing pictures employed in the academy, of my desire for independence, and all that. This happened a month or so before I received my commission. I had all the sensitive independence that goes with unrecognized ability and grinding poverty. I resented almost everything. That was my mood. One day the master said to me that he wanted competitive compositions from the pupils, and he had selected the subject of Columbus before the council, because there were a number of Americans in the academy. Now, I knew where he would place Columbus and where he would put the members of the council, but I determined that if I were compelled to paint it, I would follow my own ideas. Two days before the time line of his face.

"'It's an outrage,' he said. 'I don't understand how the committee came to give you that medal. You don't deserve it. The idea of making so bad a use of so great a subject! Now, this is what you want to do. Put Columbus over one one side, paint a side view of him. Do it this way,' and he illustrated with his expressive gestures how the figure was to be drawn. 'Now, don't paint on your little canvas. I'll give you a studio that three men have now. I'll turn them all out. You can have it by yourself. There we'll put a canvas thirty feet wide and I want you to paint this picture this way. In one, in two years, you will have produced a painting. If I have any influence with your government it will be in Washington. It will be in the Capitol. It will make you famous.' you famous.

"Of course I was pleased. I was more, I was touched.
But I didn't have money enough to work one or two years, or even one or two months longer, and I told him so frankly.
""You don't need money,' said Piloti, 'the academy, the government will pay your expenses, will hire your studio, give you your paints, buy you your canvas, engage you your model."

"I thanked him, but I went back to my studio and resumed my single canvases and tried to reach the hearts of the Munich art dealers. This will show you how the master regarded me even before I had submitted the picture that gave me my first successful order. While I was painting the portraits of the children, Piioti asked me how I was getting along with my Columbus picture. I had not begun it. I never had any intention of beginning it, and I didn't know exactly what to say to him. Suddenly an inspiration came to me.

"Do you think, Herr Director,' said I, 'that Munich is the place to paint this picture in. Isn't Salamanca a better place?"

"Quite right,' returned the master. 'Of course. Come to think of it, your models here are all Bavarians. You want Spaniards for models. Wait until you go to Salamanca. Do it there."

"That is the last I ever heard of my Columbus composition. But I have the original among my paintings in my studio now."

""What is your rule for success in art?" I asked.

"Years ago," said Mr. Chase; as he led me to the front window and pointed to the trees in the park and the half-withered grass, "I thought that Nature was master." Now I know different. Art transcends Nature. One must paint what is behind the eye of the artist. As I paint, and I love to paint, there is somebody standing by my shoulder who says to me, 'Don't paint that,' or 'paint that,' and I follow these directions. I almost see this somebody. It is conscience personified. It speaks to me. It directs me. Every day I paint whenever it is possible, whether it be well done or badly done. I paint if I have to scratch it out the next morning. I work because I can't help working. I love work."

"And your best picture? In my studio there is an empty mind. I am always painting my best picture. I am always nainting my best picture. I am always at work on it. If I only could paint the pictures I have in here." and the artist touched his forchead.

canvas. My best picture is painted there. It's in my mind. I am always painting my best picture. I am always at work on it. If I only could paint the pictures I have in here—" and the artist touched his forehead. "I don't suppose, though, that I ever shall. My best picture is still unpainted, and I hope the time will never come when I shall look at that canvas and say. "There is my best picture.'" BENJAMIN NORTHROP.

He regretted yery much that he could not continue supporting me, and he wondered what use I could make of my art training. I didn't know exactly what to do.

"I gave the matter considerable thought. I had had one year's experience in the shoe business, and I had learned how to sell a lady a pair of shoes two sizes too small for her. I was very successful in that, and I had made up my mind that if it came to the worst, I would go into a shoe store as a clerk. But fortunately I didn't

THE PELEE ISLAND CLUB.

WHERE STATESMEN AND MILLIONAIRES GO FISHING.

By a Special Contributor.

BOUT ten years ago a half dozen enthusiastic sportsmen heid a significant meeting in Chicago, the result of which was the formation of the wealthlest and most aristocratic and exclusive fishing club in the world. That organization, about which little has ever been written or published, is the Pelee Island Club, and its membership list bears the range of most brilliant statesmen and distinguished citizens; men who helped to make the history of this glorious republic and whose names will ever adorn its pages; warriors and diplomatists, kings of commerce, and magnates in the realm of finance, many of them multi-millionaires with "money to burn."

The headquarters of the club is on Pelee Island, the largest of the famous Lake Erie archipelago, and situated in Canadian waters, being embraced in the province of Ontario. It is a place which is little known, generally speaking, but the green waters which lap its sandy beach are, at certain times, fairly alive with the gamy and pretty black bass, the favorite fish of many anglers; and this is the Mecca to which the members make swift pligrimages two and sometimes three times a year, some of them going a thousand miles or more for a week's sport and temporarily leaving in the care of others business interests so extensive that they themselyes cannot tell their value. The club owns fifteen acres on the west end of the island and has elegant and commodious quarters, the fine club-house, boat-houses and keeper's dwelling representing an outlay of nearly a hundred thousand dollars. This, however, is a trifling item when the aggregate wealth of the membership, said to be not far from a hundred millions of dollars, is taken into consideration.

As to the island itself, it may truly be said that it is a remarkable place, for, though only nine miles long and six wide, its interior is one of the wildest jungles in America, never trod by the feet of white men, and inhabited only by monstrous enakes, fierce panthers and catamounts and myriads of mosquitoes, reputed along the lakes to be of extremely large size and able to crack hickory nuts with their teeth. In summer the island is a lovely spot and the scene its beauties present under the shimmering light of-ja mellow autumn sun is one of grandeur never to be forgotten when once beheld. Now, however, the driven snows and winter winds, which sweep over the frozen lakes with unrelenting fury, lend it a bleak and forbidding aspect and the few desolate fishermen who have the hardiness to dwelthere, are shut off from the rest of the world.

The Pelee Club aims to have a membership of twenty-five and never more. It has been reported that Grover Cleveland, who would rather fish than observe Memorial day, was an applicant for membership while President of the United States. If so, he was rejected. The present personnel of the organization, as furnished the writer by the manager, is: President, B. C. Turner, Chicago; vice-president, Han. J. Club members at their sport, and a charming story might be written upon that subject.

AMERICAN PEOPLE A RACE OF SPORTSMEN.
One of the most highly distinguished members of the Pelee Club, whose name is weighty in connection with important matters of state, was interviewed by the writer some months since and made these interesting statements with reference to the above subject: "The American people," said he, "have been a race of sportsmen from the days of the illustrious 'Father of His Country' to the present, in the truest and broadest sense of the term. The tendency in that direction continues and it would be stronger still, but for the felling of the forests and the robbing of the rivers, all of which has taken much of the pleasure from hunting and fishing. The despoiler of the woodland and the 'game hog' are responsible for this condition of affairs, which is to be deplored. The change it brings about must be for the worse. It means that deterioration of the universal mind and body which is necessarily brought about by a more general and almost incessant application to business and a constant mad struggle and rush for gain in crowded cities and stuffed offices on the part of many who would otherwise enjoy an occasional day or week in the fresh, pure air of nature's grand domain, away from the rabble and battle of commerce and, remote from distressing fluncial cares and strains.

"It is the free in and out life that has made us what we are, and when we give up the sunshine we become mopish and degenerate. The life of variety is the ideal life and the life that strengthens and ennobles not only the individual but the nation, which is, after all, but a whole formed of 80,000,000 parts. Since the forests and game and fish are passing away the people of this country do not longer live as they once did, for when there is no use for the rifle and gim and red, vacations are of little consequence to the average man. The East has already suffered greatly and will suffer more from this year fact, and the rate of mortality here is higher now in proportion to the population, under more faronticle conditions otherwise, than in the good old days when nearly every professional man, merchant or mechanic, took the time for an occasional hunting or fishing trip, because there was something to hunt and fish for. Men recuperated and rested their physical and mental energies then by living closer to nature, but it is different now, and they are the losers.

"The West still has plenty of game, but it is being wantonly slaughtered by those same 'game hogs,' and the fine forests are being ruthlessly destroyed and soon that section of the country, will suffer also. The forests should be more rigidly preserved and the game and fish more carefully protected before it is too late. I understand that the national and State governments are doing something in this direction in California, Oregon and Washington, and the policy is certainly most commendable. endable.

Once he caught a poacher in his woodland and gave him a severe trouncing for trespassing on forbidden ground. To the name of the man who never told a lie, even after a day's fishing, those of others of the country's greatest have been added, forming a bright galaxy of statesmen and sportsmen—two words which sometimes seem not far from synonymous.

A SEASONABLE PICTURE.

[News Letter:] Septuagenarian though he was, Annis Merrill was one of the few fin-de-siecle elderly gentlemen who acquired the use of the bicycle after attaining three score years and ten. Never weary of relating his bicycling experiences to his many early-day acquaintances, he frequently declared that his daily spin in the park made him feel younger day by day.

On the last day of the year, the old gentleman was on his wheel as usual, and proceeding along an unfrequented path, encountered a small boy whom, with the youthful enthusiasm which sometimes happily accompanies advancing years, he challenged to a race. Of course, no true boy ever refuses a challenge, and although three generations apart, these two strangely-assorted competitors were soon speeding along the track with as much eager enthusiasm as if all present and future happiness depended upon bicycling supremacy. Mr. Merrill gradually forged ahead, and when he was three lengths in advance of his boyish antagonist, the racers came within the view of the members of a junior bicycle club.

"Gee whizzar!" shouted one, who had been studying the newspaper cartoons appropriate to the season. "If there isn't Old Father Time being run out by the New Year!"

TOO MUCH FOR THE WOMEN

[News Letter:] It was unconscious comedy and unintentional tragedy. The magnificently-clad and perfectly-groomed English major attended the most fashionable church in town on Christmas morning, and treated his fellow-worshippers to a very unedifying spectacle.

The major wore a long Newmarket, the morning being raw and cold, and laid the garment aside in the sanctuary, and, at the conclusion of the service, marched down the aisle with the Newmarket over his arm. It was then perceived by all beholders in the rear that his suspenders were hanging loose below the tails of his London-made frock coat.

The combination of that self-satisfied smile, that patronizing air, that startly bearing, and those dangling braces would burst a vitascope. It was a delicious spectacle for gods and men, but, unfortunately for the major, the women beheld it too.

THE LESSON SUNK DEEP.

[The Waver] A clergyman of Chicago was pree hing about the Father's tender wisdom in caring for us all. He illustrated by saying that the Father knows which of us grows best in sunlight, and which of us must have shade. "You know you plant roces in the sunshine," he said, "and heliotrope and geraniums; but if you want your fichisias to grow they must be kept in a shady nock." After the sermon a woman came up, her face glowing with pleasure that was deep and true, "Oh, Dr. —— I am so grateful for that sermon," she said, clasping his hand and shaking it warmly. The pustor's heart glowed for a moment, while he wondered what render place in her heart and lite his worde had touched. HOLIDAY OF AN AMERICAN GIRL IN SOUTHERN ITALY.

By a Special Correspondent.

ORRENTO, Dec. 15.—The past week, from first io last, has been crowded with interest. On leaving Naples, we had had no intention of going to the top of Vesuvius, as the thought of calmly gliding up the wicked old mountain in a railway carriage, in company with a crowd of Cook's tourists, was extremely unromantic and uninviting; but, during our stay at Pompeli, we were seized with the desire of ascending Vesuvius in the old way, that is, partly on horseback and partly on foot. Accordingly, we left the hotel at sunrise on the third morning, in a very rickety little carriage, which, as we rattled along at a good pace, seemed in imminent danger of breaking down, but which, nevertheless, carried us safely to the village of Torre del Greco at the foot of the mountain. Here we were provided with horses, each one having a ragged bare-footed boy to hold the bridle, and we galloped along between hedges and green fields, the boys keeping always close to the horses' heads and running with the greatest eas reached the air, covered the rocks near by with coats of many colors.

As soon as we could take our eyes from these wonders, we turned to the view spread out below us and which the force of contrast made all the more beautiful. The green of fields and woods had never seemed so rich nor the waters of the bay so blue. In the distance lay Naples, gleaming white in the bright sunshine like a beautiful jewel with the soft-green hills for a setting. The descent, through loose cinders, into which we sank almost to our knees, was anything but agreeable, and when in the course of time we drove up to the hotel we all looked considerably the worse for wear.

We had ordered a carriage for that afternoon to drive us to Sorrento, and had barely time to repair some of the ravages of the morning's excursion, and fortify ourselves with lunch before the landlord announced its arrival. I sat upon the box next to the driver, who told me the greatest quantity of interesting things about the various towns through which we passed, but, his English being almost as incomprehensible to me as his Italian, I was obliged to call my imagination into service to supply the defects 6 my understanding. The road, after following the curve of the bay almost the entire distance, began finally to ascend between orange and lemon groves, with every now and again an ange and lemon groves, with every now and again an opening-the trees forming a frame for an exquisite ange and lemon groves, with every now and again an opening—the trees forming a frame for an exquisite picture.

On arriving at Sorrento, we found the picturesque little town in gala attire and learned that the people were celebrating the birthday of their beloved Tasso by a grand "festa," which was to last three days. Our driver informed us that we were particualrly lucky in being here at this time, as the "festa" only takes place every hundred years. These three days we have enjoyed to the utmost, entering into all the celebrations, beginning with the flower corso, when many carriages, filled with picturesquely-attired girls and men, presed slowly up and down the principal street, the occupants carrying on a merry and animated war of flowers and words with the people who leaned, laughing, over the vine-covered balconies, and with the crowds which thronged the street. How often since I have been in Southern Italy have I longed to be an artist, for at every turn one sees an enticing subject for a sketch.

Last evening, in the large open square where a crowd had gathered to see the illumination of the only straight street of the town, a young boy, with a sort of portable counter strapped around his shoulders, was calling attention to the array of pink and green tarts spread out invitingly upon it, when a party of ragged urchins surrounded him. One of their number, by fair means or foul, had come into possession of a penny which, followed by the admiring eyes of his comrades, he threw down upon the counter, with a lordly air demanding a tart and his change. He pocketed the half penny and walked calmly away, munching his tart, while his friends looked after him disconsolately

Almost every group is a picture, rich with life and color This morning there were speeches in the Town Hall, one of them being delivered by Marion Crawford, who seems to be a great favorite with the people, and whose address called forth a deal of noisy admiration and approval. The "festa" seemed inspired by a real love of the great poet who

UP-TO-DATE HINTS ON HOUSEHOLD DECORATION.

T IS now quite the thing to festoon old fish-net in T IS now quite the thing to restoon our non-net unexpected corners of one's home and to hang dead star fish, sea mosses, shells and other bits of wreckage therein. This decorative idea is admirable—it makes one's apartment look like a young lady's studio and it is also excellent discipline for the man of the house when there is company, as his first impulse is to indulge in questionable rhapsodies when his coat buttons catch in the net.

Do not arrange flowers in a shallow bowl for your dining table; put them in a red or yellow or purple vase and set on small table in bay window, in the most prominent position possible.

Arrange the contents of your china cupboard and all your mantel ornaments on top of your plano. It deadens the sound of the instrument and, to the caller who naturally looks for such bric-a-brac in its old accustomed place, it is a pleasing surprise. Dare to be original

Do not serve your callers tea from your tea table; but have the tea made in the kitchen and brought in, in your ordinary cups. This will suggest to your caller that she is hardly up to the standard of the china on your little 5-o'clock tea table—that there are far more elegant dames on your visiting list. You will be much sought after.

If you have a showy jardiniere, silver water set or bit of statuary, remember that its proper place is on a brass and onyx table in your front bay window. It would be well to economize, if necessary, at one's grocer's or butcher's in order to provide one's household with such an essential, so diverting to the passers-by. Thomas Q. Seabrooke, the well-known comedian, went into bankruptcy a few days since, with tabulated indebtedness amounting to $39,075 and accumulated assets represented by one scarfpin—value not stated. Many friendly words of deep and tender regret were expressed along the Rialto, only one discordant not sounding in the chord of sympathy. This from a seedy gentleman just in from nowhere, who said, huskilly: "Thirty-nine thousand and seventy-five dollars! Holy smoke, if I could only owe that much!" It was the amount that did it. STORY OF "UNCLE" AND HIS LIFE OF SIMPLE USEFULNESS.

By a Special Contributor.

EAR the northeastern end of Santa Catalina Island, against the cliff in a wild little cove, there is a strange-looking, ruined structure of stones. Too regular to be the chance work of the forces of nature; seemingly both too irregular and too small to have been built by man, one might fancy it the abandoned nest of some gigantic bird.

In shape it is a rude square. Neither mortar nor any substitute was ever used to fill the chinks between its ill-fitting stones. At its best estate it could have not much more than broken the force of the winds, which at times blow here with great fury. It would have been a misuse of words to call it a shelter; few would have sought it even for a refuge when the winter breakers were snarling on the rocks below it. Yet here for two winters lived a noor nature-lover. here, for two winters, lived a poor nature-lover.

Originally there was a second story on top of the one now fast falling into shapelessness, and a roof, probably of a sort to match the walls. In storms the water sometimes came in over this upper floor. To add to the wildness of the place, the ravine close at hand, in the rainy season became a roaring torrent. Nearby acres of soapstone have slid, either from slight cohesion or loosened by an earthquake, and it lies in overlapping layers, like a half-shuffled pack of cards. This slide occorred, however, after the old man had left the place. It may have been the jar of it which toppled his rude

How years he cut wood on the hills and them his nephew bargained to sell the schooner in which Uncle had earned so much for him, for eight cords of wood, delivered at Avalon, where he had a boarding-house and bakery. It was an unaccountable thing. Perhaps the malady which finally consigned him to a living grave had already touched his brain. The purchaser hired Uncle to help him cut the was loaded and tied to the shore. ht a great storm snapped her cable and nett. nor word was heard of more. Some openly said it was a judgment, that Uncle had earned the boat over and over again and should have had her. He loved the old craft. He was a Cape Ann man sailor and fisherman to the backbone—shy, gentle, solitude-loving, inoffensive, caring for naught after which the heathen of this world rage imaging vain things. The voice of the sea was as the voice of his mother to him. He loved the dumb universe and its elemental forces. When an old, old man, very feeble, afone in the poor hut, I shall hereafter describe, he was asked: "Don't you dread the winter here? Doesn't your house leak badly?"

The last question he passed over as of no moment. A fine enthusiasm lighted his poor, marred face. Into visions.

"Oh, no," he cried fervently, "I do admire to see the rains come down the canon."

The wood-cutting at an end, he came back to Avalon, and his old love the sea. One of the fishermen gave him a boat, already time-worn. After a few years of service the bottom became so spongy and worm-caten that there was little but the paint to keep the water out. In this shell would Uncle venture miles from snore, to the haunts of his favorite sand-dabs. When the tide ran strong against him he was too weak to row fervent faith, to anyone who had done him a kindness, that, or a "mess" of sand-dabs. Shark oil and sand-dabs were his all-sufficing currency.

His nephew, meanwhile had bought a number of cows, and one day said to Uncle: "Uncle, I will glye you two-bits a day if you will take care of my cows, and sell the milk."

"I wouldna have thought Uncle would ever have given up his fishing to take care of cows," said his best friend, a Scotch woman who had at one time been in the nephew's employ, and who remained devoted to Uncle to the last, "but that seemed a nice little bit of money to live on, and he took the offer. He worked hard, did Uncle, and I doubt he saw little enough of the money, but he was always awful true to those people. Of course his nephew thought Uncle wasted his money, but Uncle had to have hooks and lines—a hook and line was his life, but his nephew couldna understand that. Of course his board didna cost him anything—it didna cost his nephew anything either. He kept hotel, you know, but Uncle was so shy he'd never wait for the girls to help him—just snatch up whatever was left on the plates and off with it to a shed or something, and eat it off a box or something."

During this service came a rainless winter, the springs dried up, cattle began to die of thirst. All that season Uncle spent his spare time gathering cactus fruit and burning off the spines. The moisture in them took the place of water, and thus he saved his nephew's cows. It was not so much to save them as property he did it, but because he could not bear to see them suffer. When famished sheep came down from the mountains, he treated them the same way.

About this time his twin brother died and was buried in the cañon, a little way above Uncle's hut. The old man was passionately fond of his own people. Long years after this brother's death, his Scotch friend tells me that during his sick spells (of which he came to have one or two a year,) fearing he might need something, she has sometimes stolen up the cañon in the night and has heard him talking softly to "that old fellow," as he always called this brother.

He had a sister, also, older than himself, who lived with his nephew. When he went to see her they would sit for hours, holding each other's hands like sweet-

It was his work to cut wood on the hills and bring it flows to the water for shipment to the mainland. No one, he thought, could dress or cook them like himself. In his edible should never leave salt water. No one, he thought, could dress or cook them like himself. In his little conceits he was as epen as a child. As for "supplies," he never had much of a load to carry home. The disproportion between his big wheelbarrow and small parcels must have often struck those who saw him after he had been marketing, and this was by no means every day, nor every other day. The real use of the wheelbarrow was as a handy receptacle for any old cans, iron hoops, or wire, or rusty nails which came in his way. Then there was always the possible flotsam and jetsam of the sea. His yard was full of this old junk. It was the last flicker of his New England thrift. In his last days he became too weak to manage the wheelbarrow. He began, then, to carry a stout stick cut in the chaparral. If one spoke to him he answered the greeting cordially, for he was the politiest of men, but did not slacken his pace nor look anywhere but straight ahead. "I'm just going to the beach," or "I'm just going home," he would say as the case might be, "end as I cannot walk rap.dly, I must be getting along," and off he would hobble, at a great pace—for to the last he retained a surprising spryness—reashing fa forward with his stick, as if to pull himself ahead to faster.

He was neat-handed, too, would carry his saucer of shark cil about, or manage a ticklish kettle over his campfire without spilling a drop.

Inquiries after his health, such as have passed mere forms with the insincere multitude, he answered painstakingly, in childlike good faith. Pills were his favorite remedy for everything, and his voice was almost exultant when he said: "I'm taking pills now."

After his people went away, whatever his communication, he usually added: "I'm expecting to hear from my folks in the East, soon," sometimes: "I'm expecting a remittance from my folks in the East, soon."

It came to be very pitiful, this expecting to hear from his folks in the East. Once in a great while a letter did come and once in a still greater while a dolar came in it, always a dollar, never more—small payment on his years of arrears. Sometimes Uncle would speak of this collar with a dry humor as near bitterness as anything his gentle soul could harbor. The last week of his life he said, with a half-whimsical, half-pitiful smile, "my niece had better hurry up that dollar!"

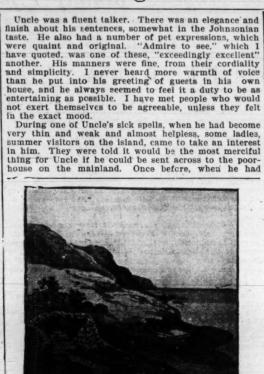

But his nephew's poor wife could really do no bet-lar!"

But his nephew's poor wife could really do no better. Life had become almost a death struggle for her. There were times of storm when no fish were to be caught, and times of sickness, when Uncle would undoubtedly have starved, had it not been for his staunch Scotch friend. Many others on the island would have helped him had they known the hours of his necessity—some cccasionally did, but she only made it a daily care to know how it fared with him in his solitude.

There was a much younger friend—one who, when a boy, had helped Uncle sail his beloved schooner—who looked after the old man, more or less, during his summer stays on the island. To him, perhaps, more than to any other, the solitary one cpened his heart, both because he belonged to his happier past, and because he, too, loved the out-door world, and by this token the old man knew the young one understood him.

His first task, after setting his own camp in order, was to bring Uncle's into some sort of discipline, and to cut the old man's hair and beard, elze untouched; his been brought very low, he had even seemed willing to go. The matter was laid before him. He would have food, shelter, company, freedom from anxiety and hardship, attendance when he was sick, beautiful trees to walk under, beautiful flowers to pick; you would have thought they were describing Paradise rather than the poor-house, and it was all true.

"I do not want to go," he said.
"Would you rather stay here and die alone? Would you rather starve than go?"

The old fire of independence lighted his dim eyes.

"I would rather die than go," he said firmly.

"Then you shall not go, and we will build you a new house."

That word put fresh life into the old man.
"It's more than anything else thinking no one cares for him that alls Uncle—he's lost heart," one who knew him well had said, and so it seemed.
His old cheerfulness returded. As the preparations for building went on, there came new directness and meaning into his movements. From day to day his mind waxed bright; he was as if intoxicated with hope. Youth came back to the old man. A true nature-lover is never really old. Sometimes youth lies dormant for a time.

Youth came back to the old man. A true nature-lover is never really old. Sometimes youth lies dormant for a time.

He began to talk about fishing on a large scale, employing men, hiring agents in San Pedro, establishing a market in Los Angeles, making daily shipments. As his ambition grew he had visions of a fine new boat, a two-master at the least, built specially for this trade. He would name her, perhaps, after the lost "Ruby," and Harry should run her for him.

"You know it could be done, Harry!"

The company, people generally, gave willingly for the new house. Soon the materials were on the ground. The day of building came. Some of the island carpenters had volunteered to help.

Those who could not work on the house for lack of space—so swarmed the helpers—were sent into the brush to cut wood for Uncle's winter fires. It was the fag-end of the season, but every young man left had either offered or been pressed into service. Even the girls took pieces of canvas and dragged in loads of twigs and small branches.

By night a new, weather-proof house with two windows, which would open, and a tile chimney, stood in front of the blackened hut, that, too, had been overhauled and tightened. Uncle was lost in wonder at the beauty of the wood work.

"It's all matched and dressed lumber—there isn't finer material in any house in the country," he said fervently to each newcomer.

In his excitement, he even pushed back the old hat that, in presence of strangers, either from shyness, or sensitiveness, or both—he was wont to wear pulled low over his nearly-closed eyes. His eyes themselves, out of which you would sometimes marvel he could see at all, were wide open and eager. In the new dignity of ownership he went from group to group, asking, with hospitable urgency, if they would not have hot coffee, and when 4 o'clock came he wanted everybody to stop work. That was a long enough day, he said, they could finish tomorrow.

"I am going to begin going out for sand-dabs soon, when I get a little stronger, and I will see that

That was a long enough day, he said, they could mish tomorrow.

"I am going to begin going out for sand-dabs soon, when I get a little stronger, and I will see that you are all well paid," said he. A boy who had helped, he afterward introduced as "one of my carpenters." It is doubtful if he ever gave up the dream of sometime paying for his house.

But when he heard that he was to have water on his own porch, he thought luxury could no farther go.

"Will the Bannings really do that?" he asked. "Can they afford to do it?" "Is it possible! Johnnie hasn't things as convenient as that!"

Even this was not all. One man gave him a bed, another a stove. Such a bed! and such a stove! Uncle could scarcely sleep at first, for the remarkable softness of the bed, and the surprising way in which it sank down when you lay upon it, and rose up again of itself, when you removed your weight. In like manner the taking qualities of the stove so filled him with admiration that he sat for a long time with the oven-door open, forgetting to take out his first loaf of bread—not a raised loaf, but a stirred one, fat and round, such as he had been used to bake on board the "Ruby." When it, and the duck "Johnnie" had brought to celebrate his house-warming, were put upon his neatly-set oilcloth-covered table, even a not very hungry person might have accepted an invitation to tea.

"Johnnie" was Uncle's one crony—a bushy-bearded, twinkling-eyed, contented little man who lived still farther up the cañon, with no company but his chickens, turkeys, ducks and pigs. There was a slight touch of patronage in Uncle's manner toward Johnnie; sometimes, also, he would exhibit a naive rivalry, for there was a delightful amount of human nature in the old man. Nevertheless he was fond of his younger and more prosperous neighbor, and many a fat fowl, and many a backload of wood did Johnnie bring him.

Although Uncle had rarely sought human companionship, he had always been the most hospitable of men to all wno came to his door. Anything he owned he would share freely with friend or stranger. If he had money it was the first comer's, for the asking. But after his new house was built he became a little wistful for society. When some of the people who had interested themselves in him went away for a few days, he said to them on their return: "I got hungry to hear good voices."

He kept the names of those who had helped him in a book, partly out of gratitude, partly. I think with a view to repaying them in sand-dabs, for he never let go his love of independence.

In his last days, it came to be quite the rule for "Johnnie," as Uncle adways called him, to drop in of evenings once or twice a week.

"Sit right down, Johnnie, and I'll make you a cup of nice hot coffee," Uncle would say. He had more warmth and sincerity of manner than almost anyone I ever met. You could not help feeling he was glad to see you. So there the two cronies would sit, sometimes until midnight. There was rare talking done those nights. Would I were able to report it.

For quite a time Uncle's housekeeping remained orthodox and praiseworthy. Then he began to find it easier to have things "handy." What did it matter, after all? There was no one but himself to please.

For very hot days he had a retreat in the thicket somewhere, which he called his "Bowery." We never found it, although we looked for it. Thither he would go, usually with his Bible, for he was a deeply religious man, although not tied to dogma.

His fishing trips became more and more infrequent, as his life waned: he might have gone oftener, perhans.

found it, although we looked for it. Thither he would go, usually with his Bible, for he was a deeply religious man, although not tied to dogma.

There came the last time. The old man would go out upon the sea no more. When he grew so weak that he could not make out even with her daily visits, his faithful Scotch friend took him to her own house and cared for him to the end. He suffered much, but every day it was: "I think tomorrow I'll be well enough to go for sand-dabs." He died, at last, as peacefully as a child goes to sleep. The Scotch woman and Johnnie were alone with him.

"It was so strange," she said, "he went off so quiet you couldna tell whether he was alive or dead. I canna tell you how I felt when I saw poor Uncle lying dead. I had a box of clothes some boys who went to the Klondike left with me. Poor boys—I knew they would never come back. They wanted me to put on Uncle's old clothes, but I said no, he deserves it and he shall be dressed right. So I put a nice shirt on him—a fine shirt, and done up so nice, and a nice dress suit and a necktie, and all. I took all the things out of the boys' box. He looked fine when he was dressed. When the preacher and the other people went into see him, they said: "It doesn't look like Uncle!" We laid him out on the lounge in the tent—the tent was fixed so nice—you woulna believe how nice it looked. I had a big picture of McKinley—I was very patriotic, and Uncle thought so much of McKinley—and I put that upon the wall above him. I worked all night fixing things and in the morning the

They buried him beside his twin brother, "that old fellow," in the little graveyard up the canon. It is still a lonely spot, but Avalon has begun to encroach on Uncle's dwelling-pace. Several rude cabins have been built nearby. The new golf links are close at hand, one of the "greens," with its gay flag, almost under his window, and two of the five little Spanish-Portuguese boys who now live in Uncle's house, earn many a dime as "caddies"

His old boat, worn and sea-stained, lies on the beach of Avalon. The rotten thing survived its owner. Uncle loved it, as he loved every timber which ever varried him upon the sea. His Scotch friend mourns because he has no stone to mark his grave. "Sometimes I think I'll have his old boat hauled up there and plant it full of flowers," she says. A more fitting monument he could not have. Perhaps his name may be painted on the bow—there any reader who cares to know it may read it. To everyone on the island he was "Uncle"—that only. But he bore a famous name, and although it was not he who made its fame, he was a natural gentleman, a man who might have been a scholar; a poet, though he never wrote a rhyme, since in his inmost soul he felt and treasured the unwritten Iliads of earth and sea. caddies.

During the early years of Spain's rule in the New World, hundreds of galleons sailed yearly from Mexico and the shores of South America for Spain, stopping at the norts of Cuba and passing out into the Atlantic through the Windward Passage. For more than a cen-tury there was a close rivalry between the buccaneers and the hurricanes to see which could sink the greater and the hurricanes to see which could sink the greater number of these treasure fleets. In many cases the loca-tion of the wrecks is now definitely known, while in many other the records at Madrid and at Havana show the location only approximately. West Indian waters outside of the harbors are exceedingly clear, so that it is oftentimes possible to see to the depth of eighteen or twenty feet, making it easy for divers to make the necessary exploration. Indeed, with some of the re-cently-invented submarine boats, such a boat, for in-necessary exploration. Indeed, with some of the recently-invented submarine boats, such a boat, for instance, as Simon Lake's Argonaut, which crawls on the bottom of the sea, it would be a comparatively easy task to prowl around on the bottom of the sea and discover these old wrecks and loot them of their gold.

A little research into the musty records of Madrid shows that during the carly part of the seventeenth century over $30,000,000 worth of silver alone were hipped from Spain. During the latter part of the seventeenth century, one mine, the Valenciana of Guanzuato, employed 4000 slaves and the company owning fifteen buccaneers, each crept around the western end of Cuba and came suddenly upon one of His Majesty's treasure ships, bound from Caraccas to Havana. They swarmed over the side of the great vessel like so many rats, and threw every Spaniard overboard. The uncouth victors ransacked the vessel for booty, but to their diagust, found only a small quantity of wine in the officer's quarters, and in the hold a lot of greyish metal, which some wiseacre on board decided to be tin ore, and, not wishing their newly-acquired vessel to be laden with such trash, the leader ordered it to be thrown overboard; and there it lies to this day, not far from the Colorado banks, not less than fifteen tons of fine silver bars.

board; and there it lies to this day, not far from the colorado banks, not less than fifteen tons of fine silver bars.

Sir William Phipps, a baronet of New England, who was once Governor of Massachusetts, enriched his ancestral house and left his descendants among the wealthiest in New England by sharing the secret of a smuggler, who saw a plate-fleet go down in a storm, about half-way between the nearest points of Cuba and Hayti. "Phipps's fortune" has been famous ever since. And yet it is said that he found only one of the sunken ships of the fleet containing not less than thirty-two tons of silver, with jewels enough to make $2,000,000. The remainder of the vessels still lie off the eastern point of Cuba, and they are estimated to contain many millions of tollars.

Another treasure wreck is the center of a most romantic and thrilling story of crime. In the year 1717 Charles Vane, a notorious pirate of the West Indies, captured about $80,000 in pieces of eight that were being taken by divers from one of five plate-ships that had gone down in a storm just east of Key West. The silver bars, as they were brought to the surface by divers, were stored in a little fort on the mainland to await the Guardacosta, which was carrying the treasure in installments to Havana. Vane learned of this and made a sudden descent upon the fort, captured the treasure, rowed out to the vessel where the divers were at work, captured the ship, and sailed away, leaving the destitute crew and divers marooned on the barren key. The platefleet of five galleons, on which these divers were a working, was carrying $4,000,000 in bullion when it was wrecked, and less than one-fourth was recovered and captured by Vane. The old records estimate that $3,600,000 still remains in the sea at this point.

it lost $1,000,000 every year by pirates and accidents at sea without in the least impairing its credit in European markets. Most of these enormous losses strew the ocean bottom around the West Indian Islands. A careful search of old Spanish records would reveal the approximate location of scores of the treasure wrecks, so that they could be visited with very little difficulty.

My researches have been limited to such ancient Spanish records as may be found in America, and from these alone—and their number compares with the immense libraries of such works in Madrid as a drop to a stream—I have unearthed the stories of more than a score of vessels and fleets, the wrecks of which now lie in American waters.

East of the Isle of Pines are the Gardinillos, or famous Jardine rocks, where lies a whole fleet of good ships. It was here that the daring buccaneer captain, Barthelome Portugues, lost the richest prize he ever took in his adventurous career, and it lies there today, awaiting the lucky submarine explorer. The accounts of the wreck in the old books is most dreumstantial.

In the old books is most freumstantial.

Barthelome Portugues had fitted out a small vessel at Golpho Triste, on the Gulf of Campeachy, and with a crew of thirty men he had captured a treasure galleon bound from Carthagenia to Havana. It was a lucky adventure. The inventory of the ship's goods showed over $100,000 worth of gold and silver bullion, with as much more in coin. Portugues set his sails for Tortuga, but as they were passing Cape Corientos, three swift-sailing guard vessels from New rientos, three swift-salling guard vessels from New Spain swept down upon the ship and captured him and Spain swept down upon the ship and captured him and the entire crew, and took them in irons to San Francisco in Campeachy. The old account tells how Portugues escaped that night, and after an almost incredible journey through the swamps, secured a cance from a friend, enlisted thirty men, and actually recovered the ship that had been taken from him. Then he sailed away again for Tortuga, that island of blood and spoil.

Off the Isle of Pines a hurricane brought down vengeance upon him and carried him irresistibly on the Jardine rocks, and the galleon with all its treasure went down. Some of the hardy buccaneers escaped in a small boat to tell the story, but the gold and silver bullion for which they risked so much is still heaped in some hollow of that rock-bound bed of the sea. This treasure would pay richly for the recovery.

Another account of sunken treasure is told as a musty joke on a musty tome. In 1650 three canoes, manned by Another circumstantial but incomplete report tells of the wreck of several treasure galleons in the Gulf of Florida in 1676. Of this treasure $8,000,000 in pleces of eight were recovered and carried to Havana. Fifty thousand more, after being stored on the shore were captured by the famous Capt. Jennings, who had hastlly equipped three sloops in Jamaica. After this assault the Spaniards abandoned all further work on the sunken galleons and lost all knowledge of their exact locality. There is no question that a little exploration here will reveal this sunken fleet, which still contains, according to the old records, several million dollars in gold and silver.

Somewhere a few miles southwest of the Isle of Pines there is a princely fortune in diamonds and gold awaiting the hunter who will travel the bottom of the Carribean Sea and cast a searchlight carefully over the hulls of sunken treasure ships. It is the remains of a Spanish ship in the royal service, whose commander, Don Sebastian Jeminez, touched at Santiago de Cuba in 1560, on his way to Spain. He was carrying the "King's fifth" from the silver mines of Guanacaboa, amounting to nearly twelve tons of good silver bars and unknown but immense quantities of personal treasure shipped by home-going merchants. Upon sailing from Santiago he was caught in a terrific tempest which tore the ship from its anchor and drove it upon the rocks within sight of the observers on the bluffs at Santiago. No vestige of ship or crew was ever seen again. The galleon probably lies not far from the recent naval battlevestige of simpler crew was ever seen again. The gaineleon probably lies not far from the recent naval battle-ground between the Spanish and American fleets, and it offers a princely lure for the bold submariner who will conduct a patient search.

Another, and probably the richest of all treasure ships lost in the West Indies, was wrecked in 1679. A notable company of officials, ecclesiastics and citizens of New Spain were on board, bound for Spain, at the invitation of the King. They carried the most costly personal possessions. The record tells of diamond crosses of enormous value and presents that were to win the favor of the great King of Spain, besides many tons of silver bullion, which was actually used as ballast. But many times richer than all these were the bars of gold which most of the officials were carrying with them back to Spain, in the hopes of living the rest of their days in distinguished opulence. One of the ladies, Dona Inez Escobedo, was taking with her an Indian slave as a present for her brother, who was Governor of one of the Canary Islands. The few negro slaves on board were servile enough, but the Indian, whose name the records do not give, was unmanageable and grew more obstinate at every punishment.

One morning, when the ship was a few leagues southeast of the Isle of Pines, the captain was horrified to find that water was pouring into the hold. He was about to descend through the hatchway to discover the cause, when the warning voice of the Indian declared that the first man to appear through the opening would be chot. Immediately those who gathered about heard the blows of a hatchet upon the bottom of the vessel. The horrible truth then dawned upon them that the untamable Indian intended to escape slavery by wrecking the ship with all on board. They drove down a negro slave, believing that his body would receive the fire of the Indian, but everything above the hatches was plainly visible from the darkness below and the negro lay where he fell, stupefled with fear, while the blows of the hatchet rained faster than ever, and the roar of the water constantly increased in volume. At last an old officer, José Nunez, sprang suddenly through the opening into the hold, waist deep in water, and charged upon the Indian, sword in hand. He was followed by half a dozen others. They splashed around and finally found the Indian under a beam, beneath the water, where he had crawled and drowned himself. The most frantic efforts were made to stop the leak, but the ship sank, and it was with difficulty that even one boatloud of the passengers was able to escape.

Numerous attempts were made by the Spaniards to recover the treasure from this ship, but divers never could find it.

These are only a few of many score of similar wrecks, the records of which can be found in the old Spanish records.

These are only a few of many score of similar wrecks, the records of which can be found in the old Spanish reports and histories. They will indicate in some measure the enormous richness of these hitherto undescribed resources of our new possessions.

HE WANTED A PENSION.

[Chicago Times-Herald:] Opie Read tells a funny story of a colored man who had conceived the idea that he could get a pension from the government. He went to a pension agent to learn what steps it would be necessary for him to take to bring about the desired result. "Were you really in the army, Sam?" asked the agent. "Yas, sah; indeed I was, sah; I was in de army for more'n a year, sah."

"What regiment were you in, Sam?"

"But you surely remember whom you were with, you?"

"Yas, sah; yas, sah."

"Were you ever wounded, Sam?"
"Yas, sah; indeed I was; see dat scar, sah; I got dat scar in de army, sah."
"What was it hit you, Sam?"
"Wall, sah, it was a skillet, sah; indeed it was; a big iron skillet, sah."
"Now, see here, Sam, what chance can you have to get a pension? In the first place, you were in the rebel army, and then the only wound you received, anyway, was from a skillet; what in the world has our government got to do with your case?"
"Wall, sah, it was a government skillet, sah."

HIS PLAN OF CAMPAIGN.

FINERTY'S SERMON.

[The Wave:] Before ex-Congressman John Finerty became famous, he was one of the best reporters in Chicago. He was on the Tribune, and one day his city editor decided that Mr. Finerty should be disciplined. It was Saturday, and some time after midnight. Mr. Finerty was assigned to report the morning sermon of an obscure minister way down on the South Side. Finerty was the senior, and his associates were thunderstruck. They expected an explanation, at least, but Finerty remained calm and dignified. "Then he will resign," they thought: but Finerty walked out and made no sign. He reported next day as usual, and turned in an abtract of the sermon. Everyone read it on Monday morning, and it was certainly an eloquent and carefully-reported sermon. That afternoon a man of clerical cut called on the city editor and asked to see the young man who had reported his sermon the morning before. Mr. Finerty was introduced. The man of the clerical cut would like to see Mr. Finerty alone for a few moments. Out in the hallway he asked: "Of course, you were not at my church yesterday morning?" "No." replied Finerty. the hallway he asked: "Of course, you were not at my church yesterday morning?" "No." replied Finerty. "Well, I simply stopped to thank you for the sermon. It was far more eloquent than the one I preached." Finerty had composed the sermon in a neighboring beer cellar on Saturday night.

POLITENESS IN ST. LOUIS.

[Chicago Times-Herald:] While Mrs. D. Y. Van Dyne was entertaining her fashionable friends a well-dressed stranger appeared at the door and without ceremony said he desired to use the parlor while he had a fit. Somewhat astonished, Mrs. Van Dyne ushered the stranger in and then retired from the room, wondering if she were being made the victim of a practical joke. The stranger entered a side parlor, lay down on the floor and had his fit. When it was over, he thanked his hostess and departed, without glving his name.

LIBERTY FOR THE FILIPINOS.

QUESTION OF THEIR FITNESS FOR GOV-ERNING AND CITIZENSHIP.

By a Special Contributor.

HE government and all the conditions of life of 7,000,000 men, women and children, inhabitants of the Philippine Islands, have been profoundly affected by the decision of the Paris Peace Commission. It is a little singular that, while the disposition of the islands has been thoroughly discussed from the point of view of the Americans, the English, the Germans and the Japanese, the Filipino has hardly been consulted as to his desires and inclinations regarding the future. Ramon Reyes Lala, a native of the Philippine Islands, educated in England and now temporarily a resident of the United States, who is thoroughly familiar with the conditions in the Philippines, appears as the champion of his people, and in the following article he makes some exceedingly valuable suggestions for the future government of the Philippines, showing vividly the needs and hopes of his countrymen: It is a little singular that, while the disposition of

"There has been not a little curiosity shown by the American public as to the future of the Filipino, and not a few wiseacres have croaked most dolefully about his worth as a citizen. I therefore wish to show that my countrymen are not as black as they have been painted and that there is enough stamina in the race to warrant cultivation and a high citizenship.

True, we have no world genius to show you, we have no grand literature, no distinct national art—but there are, I think, enough evidences of our capacity for these things to cause Americans to give us a genuine Yankee

"I have merely made mention of these names to prove that a few of us at least are ready for even the duties of American citizenship—high as these are—and I do not underrate them when I say this. Indeed, we can show not a few others who would rank on the same intellectual plane with the gentlemen mentioned above—and there is no reason why, in the course of a generation, there should not be thousands where now there are scores. It will cause some surprise when I state that no subject possesses greater interest to the Filipino mind than civics and law. There are today already more than 1000 Filipinos who are full-fiedged lawyers—graduates of the University of Manila, and some of them of the best schools in Europe. The average native also is much interested in the affairs of his village, and there is usually as much desire among them to hold public office as among the rulers of free America.

ANNEXATION MAY CHANGE THOUSANDS OF NA-

ANNEXATION MAY CHANGE THOUSANDS OF NA-TIVE NAMES.

"Annexation will possibly have the peculiar effect of changing family names in the Philippines. As a pater-familias, the Filipino has no superior, here or elsewhere; for nowhere, I verily believe, is there more family affection than among the natives of my country, but the mother is really the head of the home; her word but the mother is reasy the head of the nome; her word is law and she gives the surname to her offspring, who hold her in peculiar awe. Necessarily, much of this will be changed by the advent of western civilization, and I confess that I am sorry, too, for there is a great deal that is 'lovely in these eastern domestic customs. However, the elastic nature of the Filipinos will easily adjust itself to new conditions, and will retain its inharcent virtue.

adjust itself to new conditions, and will retain its inherent virtue.

"I do not believe, as some of my countrymen do, that the Filipino will disappear before the incoming tide of American emigration, as did the American Indian. There are good reasons for this belief. One is, we are of the tropics tropical, and not even a hundred generations could completely acclimatize the American, nor adapt him to the conditions of this sultry zone. There is no more danger that we will be supplanted by the Americans than that the Dutch will supplant the Malays in "Millions of acres of arable land are yet untilled. They wait an era of demand to impel them to fruitfulness; and America will create that demand by an in-creasing commerce, that will redound to her double advantage. For, in exchange for the products of the islands, she will give the thousand and one articles of civilization manufactured in America. Send us prayer books and missionaries for our rice and hemp if you wish; but keep out American liquors and American pol-wish; but keep out American liquors and American politics. No one can drink the strong beverages of the temperate zone in the Philippines and live. Many foreigners, it is true, insist upon their arrival in Manila on calling for whiskies and brandies; but such indulgence is sure, even if continued only moderately, to superinduce a fatal fever, or some other tropical disease. Many of the foreigners who have died there owed their death to the daily tipple alone. For this reason the climate has not been so dangerous to the natives of wine-drinking countries, like France and Italy. American troops should be cautioned in regard to this insidious danger, and strong liquors, both for your sake and ours, should be kept out of the colony.

PROTESTANTISM WILL NOT FLOURISH.

PROTESTANTISM WILL NOT FLOURISH.

"Protestantism will not flourish in the Philippines. The pomp and ceremonial of the Catholic church apmost strongly to the native imagination, and no religion which is wanting in splendor and in grand music will find a foothold in the islands. There is thus little danger of the Filipinos ever becoming Quakers. They are a very musical people. Every village has its native orchestra, and in the processions, of which the native orchestra, and in the processions, of which the natives are so fond, and which occur every few days, the music is the chief feature. Indeed, it may be said that every Filipino plays some instrument, and even ittle children five or six years of age play the piano or guitar amazingly well. It is refreshing to go through the suburbs of Manilia on a fine summer's eve and to hear the happy people on the wide verandas of their houses singing and playing popular airs, which the passers-by below will take up, so that the whole street resounds with melody. Music is truly a great civilizer, and it has doubtless been a powerful instrument in the hands of the church to win the natives to the standard of the cross. To the native, however, all music is divine, and it is music of the stirring, operatic sort that most appeals to him. It must be full of movement. The soft, tender airs of sentiment, or the music of emotion do not affect him. Thus in the churches and at funerals it is a common thing to hear lively marches and the latest waltz—while the audience listens entranced—keeping time with hands and feet.

FILIPINOS IN ART.

"Strange to say, the Filipines, notwithstanding their great love for music and their wonderful ingenuity in inventing and constructing musical instruments, have great love for music and their wonderful ingenuity in inventing and constructing musical instruments, have no distinct school of their own, preferring to play the compositions of European composers than to take the trouble to write their own. I believe, however, that they are capable of a high order of composition, for one of the gifted Luna brothers, whom I knew very well, composed some pieces of extraordinary merit—and I am sure others also have the genius to do so.

"I must make some reference, also, to the Filipino in the realm of art. We have produced few great painters—and yet another of the Luna brothers, who studied in Madrid, took prizes in the Art Academy there, and gives promise of a remarkable career. This, however, shows of what the race is capable, and I am convinced tifat we have many Lunas. Out of primitive conditions, also, we have evolved a style of architecture eminently suited to our environment. The prevalence of death-dealing tornadoes and of destructive earthquakes—those iconoclasts of the Philippines—have forbidden the erection of splendid temples and of imposing piles. The finest edifices at present are of Spanish design, but how could it be otherwise, when the Spaniards superintended the construction of every building in the colony?

LARGE ESTATES SHOULD BE PROHIBITED.

LARGE ESTATES SHOULD BE PROHIBITED.

'I believe that large estates should be prohibited by law, for I fear that a few scheming Americans may soon own the greater part of the islands, and will therefore soon have a great part of the population on their estates, educating them for a future of dependence and tates, educating them for a future of dependence and for political subserviency. At present every native owns his own house and his own little patch of land, and is contented and happy. Let him continue undisturbed in his humble possessions.

"The chief necessity of the islands are good schools, and we hope that the Americans will not long withhold from us this long-desired boon. Comparatively few natives have had the advantage of modern methods. At present the educational facilities are most meager and the methods of the native schoolmasters, as well as of the Spanish priests, are most antiquated. Only Spanish books have as a rule been allowed, and the whole course of colonial education has had a theological tlas. The groundwork of superstition, however—reared with such infinite labor during the centuries of Spanish priestcraft—is fast giving way. The eyes of the natives have at last been opened. They will no longer tolerate the delusions of the past, but will eagerly embrace the doctrines of the new. Under American dominion, a glorious future awaits the Filipino. He will for once be able to hew out of the rock of opportunity the statue of his own worth."

Heroes Have the Call.

PHILIPPINE ISLANDERS AND A NATIVE HOUSE.

"We have, I repeat, already given evidence of a capacity for civic functions. Though living amid the most discouraging conditions and under the most oppressive government in the civilized world, my countrymen have ever proved tractable and law-abiding, where the law was based upon equity and right. Nay, they have done more than this. It is said by all travelers that no other people in the world would have endured as much as the Filipinos, and therefore they can surely not be accused of a rebellious disposition. And when, finally, the dogs of war were let loose, it can surely not be said that these 'blood-thirsty and cruel Malays' did much havoc among the hundreds of defenseless Spaniards who were in their power.

GOVERNING ABILITIES OF THE FILIPINOS

But it is not upon this capacity to refrain from bloodshed in times of great provocation that I would base the right of my countrymen to citizenship. I claim that we have shown for generations—ever since the Spanish occupation, and even long before—the capacity to govern ourselves, for the most of the gobernadocilios or governourselves, for the most of the gobernadocillos or governors of townships, and many of the provincial governors, have been native Filipinos. As the township, under an American regime, would also be the unit of government, it follows that the same administrative talents that have made the Filipino communities models of domestic peace hitherto, will keep them the same. As to the larger offices of state, the majority with us, as well as with you in America, are probably unfitted. And yet we have men among us who would, I think, be fit to assume any task that the United States might impose upon them—even to the Governor-General of the colony itself.

THREE MOST FAMOUS FILIPINOS.

surely shown remarkable ability, and would, I believe, always handle himself with discretion. Agoncillo is another man who has shown an uncommon talent for af-fairs—while Cayetano S. Arellano, the eminent Manila jurist, is, in my mind, as capable as any American whom it has yet been my fortune to meet. This man whom it has yet been my fortune to meet. This man is a profound lawyer, and is of untarnished reputation. He is widely traveled, and conversant with the history of other countries as well as with every detail of the life of his own. He should be put at the head of the Supreme Court of the islands, if the United States decide to assume the task of governing them, for no other

Java. The body of the population must ever be native-born and in that physiological necessity and ethnolog-ical fact, lies our national salvation. Therefore, even in the event of American annexation, the Filipinos will in the main rule themselves; nor can anyone else do it

American annexation will give us not the rule of a hated foreigner, but the opportunity of political equality—where each individual can work out his own destiny on lines of individual choice.

OTHER EFFECTS OF ANNEXATION.

"The Filipinos are by nature agriculturalists. farm suits them better than the store or factory. The Chinese and the foreigners, indeed, almost monopolize chinese and the foreigners, indeed, almost monopolize the trade of the islands; the natives being in the main producers, or else in the professions. And right here will come the great opportunity for American commerce; for the carrying trade of the islands, as well as the various kinds of manufacture will soon be in American hands, and the chances for large profit will soon draw many investors to those golden shores.

"The hemp, tobacco, sugar, lumber, indigo, rice and cocoa industries will thus alone receive a magnificent impetus and the production of these articles of export will be stimulated, so that within five years their yield will be increased threefold. Hitherto there was iittle incentive to work hard for oneself, since the profits were shorn for the benefit of the oppressor. Woe to the Filipino who prospered; he was fleeced in a thousand ways by the officials of the state and of the church. Thus ambition was atrophied and enterprise of every sort was dwarfed into apathy. Foreign investors also were similarly encouraged, and many were only allowed to leave the scene of their unprofitable investment after they had lost their last dollar. I remember two Englishmen who had discovered a great ledge of coal. They were the scene of their unprofitable investment after they had lost their last dollar. I remember two Englishmen who had discovered a great ledge of coal. They were allowed, at great expense, to develop it until the point when it was about to become profitable. Then the government began to impose restriction after restriction, until every further endeavor was attended only with loss. The investors were finally forced to give up in despair, as the Spaniards intended that they should; and both of them left the islands in disgust. Another investor, an American friend of mine, Thomas Collins, went into the lumber business and seemed on the high road to great wealth, when he became involved in a lawsuit which a corrupt judge decided against him, leaving him penniless as the result of an unjust decision.

Heroes Have the Call.

Another era's dawning. Things that charmed the world Are losing their attractions, hour by hour; The idol of the masses finds his glory almost o'er. Like the fainting fragrance of a withering flower. No more the politician moves the multitude to cheers; No more for orators the music plays; No more men wait with laurels for successful financiers; You've got to be a hero, nowadays.

Dame Clio takes her pen in hand and turns another page,
The records of a maryelous year to trace,
And thousands crowd and struggle her attention to engage,
But the old-time winners aren't in the race.
In vain the mountebank proclaims his presence with a drum;
In vain does Art perform her polished lays.
The echoing of the cannon makes all else seem sadly dumb.

SALMON FISHING ON PUGET SOUND.

HOW THE SILVERY BEAUTIES ARE CAUGHT AND CURED.

By a Special Contributor.

AIRHAVEN (Wash.,) Jan. 1.-Over clear waters, lightly dancing to the soft music of a gentle breeze wafting its way from the snow-clad peaks of the Cascades over that great inland sea called Puget Sound, our steamer with its gay crowd of eastern visitors slowly swings up toward a salmon fish trap, one of the sights peculiar to this region.

We had steamed through a vast school of salmon. We had seen them in countless multitudes flashing through the limpid waters, or now and then in exuber-ance of sport throwing themselves from crest to crest of the waves. Yet that trap, with its 20,000 imprisoned salmon, making an almost solid mass well high forty feet square and forty feet deep, the whole, acted on by the tide, swaying in such manner as to cause the trap owner much uneasiness, was the crowning sight of all.

"Tie up to the trap piles?"
"By no means." A single line from our steamer with the slightest pull might tear out the whole trap, and $2000 worth of fish be lost.

So we steam easily forward and back in front of the trap and watch the trap-crew with a large band-net dip out fifty to a hundred sock-eye salmon at a lift until we have seen two thousand or more transferred from the water to the scow.

Practically all the salmon canned in the world is packed in Northwest America, that is, Oregon, Wash-ington, British Columbia and Alaska. Salted salmon are put up to a small extent on the Siberian Coast, and the market is found in China and Japan, but as no means have been taken to keep the supply of fish on the Asiatic Coast, they have been rapidly depleted, and today the oriental nations are looking to this country for their salted salmon, and orders have been sent to Puget Sound which cannot be filled this season.

England and Australia draw their entire supply of canned salmon from this section, mainly from British Columbia, while the United States draws its supply from Alaska, Oregon and Washington, and now the new markets of the Hawalian Islands, the Philippines, China and Japan will secure their canned salmon from the same source. are put up to a small extent on the Siberian Coast, China and Japan will secure their canned salmon from the same source.

California in 1897 put up about 28,000 cases of salmon on the Sacramento River, but 28,000 is a mere drop in the bucket compared with the output of this section for practically 3,000,000 cases of salmon were packed that year in the Pacific Northwest—Alaska, British Columbia, Oregon and Washington, each packing in round figures one-third of the output.

In following the salmon from the cradle to the grave, which, perhaps, is a less offensive manner of statement of following its fortunes from the natural spawning bed or hatchery to—well, the dining-table, where it appears as canned salmon, many things strange and unusual are to be noted.

As stated, the pack of the world in 1897 was approximately 3,000,000 cases. Each case consists of forty-eight one-pound cans; hence the number of cans used was at least 144,000,000. Three million cases of salmon are worth at the place of production between $10,000,000 and $12,000,000. At least $9,000,000 capital is haudled in producing this quantity, thousands of men, women, girls and boys and Chinamen are employed, and along both the Oregon and Washington shores of the broad Columbia, up the coast in Willapa and Gray's harbors farther up into Puget Scund, at Point Roberts, Blaine, Semiahmoo, Fairhaven, Anacortes, Friday Harbor, thence up the Fraser River into British dominions, on up the British Columbia coast, up in the nooks and rivers of Alaska, all is life and activity during the canning secson.

In the State of Washington alone, which in 1897 thence up the Fraser River into British dominions, on up the British Columbia coast, up in the nooks and rivers of Alaska, all is life and activity during the canning secon.

In the State of Washington alone, which in 1897 packed 689,926 cases, the investment in twenty-two canneries, including all appurtenances, was $2,582,000; 6800 men were employed, receiving $1,450,000 in earnings, and the pack was valued at $2,582,000. And yet this business, so far as Puget Sound is concerned, is only in its infancy, for in five or six years it has grown from nothing to its present magnificent proportions. In 1897 Washington packed 22 per cent. of the pack of the world; the Puget Sound district put up 72 per cent. of the State pack, and Whatcom county, in which Fairhaven is located, put up about 60 per cent. of the pack of the district.

The varieties of salmon in Puget Sound are locally known as the Chinook, tyee or spring, the sock-eye, the humpback, the silver, dog and steethead. The sockeye is the choice canning fish. The flesh is a rich red, the meat is fine fibred, the oll is rich in coloring, and what makes this fish particularly desirable from the canner's point of view is the fact that this species moves in countless schools. Five thousand salmon in a scow is an ordinary sight. Thirty or forty thousand fish on the floor of a cannery makes a showing.

The sockeye is artificially propagated in hatcheries, and spawns in a natural state as well. From 3000 to 4000 eggs make the product of one female. The female lays her eggs as far up a creek or river towards its headwaters as possible, and, after spawning, dies. Were it not for this provision of nature, coupled with the attacks of enemies without number, for it is estimated that but 2 per cent. of the eggs hatched naturally arrive at maturity, there would soon be no Paclific Ocean—nothing but fish stretching from the Paclific Coast to the Orient. This statement seems extravagant, yet the logic of calculation proves it. It is calculated that the productiveness of the fe capacity had developed into mature salmon, their progeny would have numbered 8,250,000,000 fish.

When a few months old the young sockeye descends the river, and goes to sea, and no man knows where it spends its time until the fourth year, when the school returns to its place of birth to fulfill the function and complete the round of nature.

It is on the return, just before or just after entering the river that the fish is taken by traps or seines. Traps are necessarily used in the clear, phosphorescent waters of the Sound. In general a trap consists of a row of piles driven from the shore out into the deep water. This row is frequently several hundrod feet long. From above the line of high water to the bottom of the Sound a net is hung, making, as it were, a fence. As the schools of salmon sweep along the shore they encounter the net, and leading along it enter the heart of the trap through an entrance which, however, does not serve as an exit. The heart, or trap proper, is a large bag hung from the piles, and is generally forty feet squares and forty feet deep. From the trap the salmon are taken in scows to the cannery. As they are thrown from the scow into a hoist which lands them on the cannery floor they are counted for the first and only time. them on the cannery floor they are counted for the first them on the cannery floor they are counted for the first and only time.

In most canneries Chinamen are employed to do the work. They are paid by the case. A canner, for instance, makes a contract with a Chinese contractor to furnish men enough to pack 25,000 cases, at a price ranging from 40 to 45 cents per case. If the output is over 25,000 cases, the Chinamen are paid for the surplus. If less, the canner has to settle with the Chinamen for the difference between the amount packed and his guarantee. his guarantee.

The first operation in the cannery is called "butchering," that is, the head, fins and tail are taken off, and the entrails removed. The fish now go into the "sliming" tank, where they are partially washed, thence into a second tank, where they are washed thoroughly. Let me say here that while canneries do not post up a sign, "Cleanliness is next to godliness," they live up to the rule with a thoroughness that is admirable. But candor compels me to say that cleanliness about a cannery is an absolute necessity, or—the product might be damaged.

The fish now go to the power-cutter—a series of revolving knives which cut each fish into the length of a can. Next, by hand, the fish is cut lengthwise into pieces that will go into a can. The can has no top on up to the present. There is a small quantity of salt in the can, and the fish is put in on top of that. It is in filling the cans that the majority of white labor is utilized. The Chinese will butcher the fish, Chinese and whites will wash and cut the fish, white labor will fill the cans, and the rest of the process is largely carried on by Chinese.

and whites will wash and cut the fish, white labor will fill the cans, and the rest of the process is largely carried on by Chinese.

The can, now filled with fish, goes to the washing-machine, which not only washes the oil off the outside of the can, but also packs the meat down in the can to permit the "chip" to be put in and the top to be put on. You have doubtless noticed two little drops of solder on the top of a can of salmon, one in the center, the other anywhere. Both of these drops fill holes, but the top, which is now placed on, has only the open hole in the center of it. The can now goes to a crimper, which squeezes the edge of the top down against the body, and directly from here the cans roll on their sides in an inclined position, with the head lower than the bottom, through a bath of acid and then through a bath of solder kept hot by fires underneath. If any steam generated in the can during this process the top would not stay in place, hence the little open hole in the center to permit the steam to escape, and hence that "chip" of tin to keep the fish from plugging the hole at this and another point in the operation. From the soldering-machine the cans roll down a long incline, the hot solder meantime settling in the seam. This part of the process of canning salmon is mechanical, but there is a fascination in watching cans dodge around the crimping-machine, take a taste of acid, struggle through the hot solder, and then chase one after the other down the incline they run under a spray of water to cool the hot solder, and are there caught and placed in "coolers." These coolers are iron baskets about three feet square and three inches deep. The cans are placed on their bottoms, and every can hole sealed with solder. Now for the first test, and tests come frequently. Each cooler is lowered into a tank of clear water. If any can leaks the fact is betrayed by little bubbles. Those that leak are taken out and carried to the hand-solderers, who are remarkably expert. One cooler of cans is placed on not coolers are taken out of the retort they are washed in a bath of caustic soda, then washed off with fresh water and carted to the cooling floor, where they stand until cool. Then they are tested again, but this time they are tapped with a little steel rod, and the sound given forth determines whether the can is tight. Now lacquering comes. This is to keep the can from rusting. Next the label is put on showing the brand of sulmon inside. Then the can is wrapped in tissue paper, then put in a box with forty-seven mates, shipped by rail or boat, and you get your share, declaring when you eat it that the "sockeye" salmon put up at Fairhaven is the choicest you ever ate.

The sockeye is not the only salmon canned. The tyee or spring, the silver, the humpback and the qualah or "dog," are also packed. They are all choice food fish, but the epicurean world has gotten accustomed to look-ing for the red color in salmon, and will take nothing else. The world needs educating, however, in 'he sal-more line.

At the height of the season, when 200 to 300 people are fairly jumping to pack 20,000 to 30,000 fishin a day, the sight about a cannery is an enlivening one. The wages paid are good, unskilled help, sometimes at filling alone, earning $2 per day. On the other hand, while the construction of a cannery involves an investment of $10,000 to $25,000, the amount of capital to handle the product is about $3 per case; hence it may safely be assumed that a cannery that produces 150,000 cases in a season must have a working capital of about $450,000.

At times fish have come in such numbers as to be a drug on the market, unsalable at any price whatever, down to 2 cents a fish, though these times will probably never come again. The writer has seen 4000 fish thrown away because they could not be handied before they spoiled; has seen fish sold at 2 cents, and has seen the same kind of fish sold at 25 cents each. Some years there is a rare profit in the business of canning salmon; other years the balance is on the other side of the ledger.

ledger. The sportsman will sigh as he thinks of the millions of salmon caught for commercial purposes, with no regard for his feelings. Well, all salmon are not to be tempted into taking a bait of any kind, but some of the most royal sport to be found the world over is here on Puget Sound at certain seasons of the year.

The steelhead salmon, which is doubtless an ocean trout, and not a salmon at all, is now running, and will be caught in nets during the next two months. Probably this fish might be allured into taking a bait, but the wet winter months do not tempt sportsmen out for experiments. The steelhead is the great shipping fish for winter, and commanded during the latter days of December 25 cents a pound wholesale in New York City.

The spring salmon will follow the steelhead in March, and will be caught as late as August. This fish sometimes reaches seventy-five pounds in weight. It does not take a tait.

The sockeye salmon will come in July, and ruu in countless schools. It will weigh six or seven pounds. Neither does it take a bait, and in fact few men can tell what it lives on, for nothing is found in its stomach when caught.

when caught.

In September and October the silver salmon come, and every second year the humpbacks come with them, or shortly after, and then follow the qualah, or "dog"

But the silver salmon is the sportsmen's delight. He will weigh ten to fifteen pounds, and is generally raw will weigh ten to inteen pounds, and is generally caught with a trolling-spoon, sometimes on a light rod. He who gets a silver on a seven-ounce rod has more business to the square inch on hand than he often finds. This fall, out of a school of silver salmon within a few miles of this city, 60,000 fish were taken in nets. The sportsman who trolled among that same school took—well, a whole boatload, for they didn't count them.

sinds. This fall, out of a school of silver salmon within a few miles of this city, 60,000 fish were taken in nets. The sportsman who trolled among that same school took—well, a whole boatload, for they didn't count them.

Spearing is another form of sport resorted to in the rivers and creeks after the salmon have ascended them. The writer speared a thirty-pounder one time, and it was an even question for a long time whether the spearsman would get his fish or the fish would get the spearsman it was this way: I stood on a narrow little bar, in the river, with deep water either side of it. I drove my spear at a big fellow passing the end of the bar, and the detachable point went through his lower jaw, leaving the string, which attached the point to the haft of the spear, leading out through his mouth. I would draw the fish out of deep water up to my feet, and with a mighty effort he would flop into deep water on the other side of the bar. And so we fought it out. But he was getting the better of the fight, for I noticed my cord was fraying badly. I wanted that fish, and finally I got him, though by the basest sort of strategem. At the instant when I dragged him for about the fortieth time on the bar. I flung myself headlong on him, reached in my pocket for a knife, and in a dastardly way stabbed him to death. That echo you heard a few months from this country was nothing more than the horse laugh of my friend on the bank at my appearance when I rose dripping with water from that bar—but I had my fish, weighing exactly thirty pounds.

Leaving the great waters of the Sound, with their shore-lining traps and the steam and noise of the capnery, and the sportsmen with their rods and linea, let us go up the river and a tributary creek clear to the headwaters, and there in water that would scarce come to the top of a child's shoe, we see salmon floundering over the stones and gravel, their bruised and sore backs and bodies showing that their journey from the salt water up the river and creek has been full of pain and s

MADAME CLEO, THE MAN-EATING LIONESS.

ITH a tiresome, monotonous motion the elephant swung his dingy trunk to and fro, stopping occasionally to dispose of an offering of biscuits from some youthful admirer. The giraffe craned his long neck, and compared it to the boa constrictor, which passed the time in sluggishly twining its length about a pole set up in the snake's Monkeys chattered and hyenas snarled. But all in vain were the several savage attractions displayed before the public in attendance at Morris Bros.' great Even the Royal Bengal tigers were left to snap at each other, and blink their eyes in the sun without attention, for all the people were clustered round Mme

This object of the general curiosity was not a wild "lady" from Borneo, but a great, gaunt African lioness, and, on an unsensational basis, she merited observation. But that which held her spectators spellbound, was, as is usually the case with the dear public, a horrible atrocity of which the madame had been guilty. Beneath her long ribs reposed the remains of a man. the afternoon of the previous day she had killed her feeder and had made a comfortable meal of him.

So the people walked about in awe-struck silence be fore the grim old animal's cage, watching her tawny hide rise and fall in silken undulations as she moved restlessly about, or uttering low exclamations of admiration at view of her superbly muscled limbs.

And all the while she gazed on them with furtive shifty glances, her cruel eyes now staring into the limpid orbs of a high school girl, and again transfixing the gaze of a plump matron. The plump matron could not repress a shudder of horror as Mme. Cleo luxuriously licked her chops, thinking, no doubt, of the splendld dinner she could pick up if those horrid bars were dinner she could pick up if those horrid bars were only out of her way.

The Empress of the Desert had just sent the wondering onlookers back from the ropes with cries of terror by opening her red cavernous mouth to its utmost extent, when a newcomer sauntered up. He was shabbily dressed, in fact, it would be no slander to say that he was ragged. His beard knew not the touch of a razor, and his tangled hair had never been acquainted with a comb. That is to say, apparently. Soap and water were strangers to his face. As he advanced to the ropes, with steady gaze and unmoved features, the old lioness looked down upon him. The eyes of the man and those of the animal met.

It seemed that the lioness saw something in his hard,

It seemed that the lioness saw something in his hard, defiant optics pleasing to her, for she quivered from head to foot, and looked steadfastly into the vagabond's face, with her great flaming, yellow orbs.

Quietly the man returned her gaze without filnching. Then the great cat stretched out her neck to him, wagged her long tufted tall, and purred as softly as a frolicsome kitten.

frolicsome kitten.
Quickly stepping across the ropes, the man went close up to the cage. Passing in his arm he patted the thoroughly friendly animal on the head, while cries of horor rose from the vast throng of spectators, and the plump matron fainted dead away.

Then several feeders with pitchforks came running up, fearful that Mme. Cleo had devoured some of the lokerson. But to their amazement, they found, instead, a trampish-looking individual stroking the old maneater's shoulders, thrusting his arm in her gaping mouth, and playing with her as if she was a harmless pussy cat.

While the men stood astounded, and the spectators, recovering from their frantic fears, gazed with solemn silence at the daring vagabond, one of the owners walked up. Taking in the situation at a glance, he beckoned the trampish individual to follow him. Manifesting no surprise whatever, the man did as he was to'd, and his conductor led him to the ticket office.
"Now sir." exclaimed the showman sternly. "you "Now, sir," exclaimed the showman, sternly, "you were playing with that lioness. Why did you do that?"

"Because I felt inclined to," answered the vagabond.
"Do you know that she ate a man up yesterday as you

"Oh, I read about it in the paper. That's what made me come down here."

"Twas, eh? Now, then, what's the game?" queried the circus man, with a look of admiration in his eyes.

"Well, mister, it's just this. I'm a hodcarrier by trade, but have been out of work nearly three months. Now, I'm no more arraid of that lioness, or anything else that goes on legs, than you are of a week-old puppy. So, things being pretty blue, I decided to come down and get a job playing with that old cat to amuse the people."

"What salary do you expect to What salary do you expect to get?" asked the show-

"Twenty pounds a day'll do," replied the hodcarrier, nonchalantly.
"How much did you make at your trade?"

"How much did you make at your trade?"

"About 4 shillings a day. Sometimes as much as 5."

"And you want me to give you £20 a day. A bit of a rise that, don't you think?"

"Yes, but you see there's a great deal of difference between maneaters and carrying mortar. I might not get the chance to pet my maneater very long at £20 a day." answered the man with a laugh.

"Well, you'll be worth it, so I'll take you up," said the showman. "You'll have to give two exhibitions a day, besides which you must ride with Mme. Cleo in her cage during the morning parade. And you must sign an agreement freeing me from all responsibility for your safety."

Scintillant with flashing tinsel, and strapped into uncomfortably tight, fleshings, the ex-hodearrier advanced with steady steps to where Mme Cleo was pacing to and fro with impatient strides behind her bars. As he approached she lowered her head, and, with the tawny tuft at the end of her tail waving gently, gave vent to the low purring sound which assured him that he would

An attendant stepped forward and handed the tamer whose name was Jonas Webb, a short, heavy whip. Webb coolly cracked it over the man's back, and then tossed it on one side.

Without a tremor he sprang into the outer cage. Be-Without a tremor he sprang into the outer cage. Between him and the lioness remained a barred partition. The daring fellow fastened the bars behind him, and strode fearlessly to the inner door.

Every voice was hushed. Every heart throbbed fearfully. The failing of a pin would have been audible. The news had gone broadcast that a common workman would enter the cage of Mme. Cleo, the maneating lioness, and thousands after thousands crowded into the big tent that they might see what manner of man this was who dared meet the ferocious brute on the ground of brute force unassisted by artifice or ingenuity.

man this was who dared meet the ferocious brute on the ground of brute force unassisted by artifice or ingenuity.

Despite a previous display of audacity not one man in a hundred would have given sixpence for Webb's chances of life. Therefore, when they saw him unlock and throw open the connecting door, they saw the tawny lioness stretch herself lazily, while, accompanied by gentle purring, she rubbed her lean body against the tamer's legs, their amazement knew no bounds. For the duration of ten seconds, the most intense silence brooded over the assembly, and then, as with one voice, they raised a shout that echoed and reëchoed through the dome of the great tent and out into the streets. It rolled along in a wave of sound in every direction, causing as much excitement outside among the folk who were not circus-goers as a fire alarm.

From the first time he entered her cage, Jonas Webb and Mme. Cleo were fast friends. With him she always displayed the gentleness of a pet pigeon, but to the attendants whose duty it was to place food and water within her reach at proper intervals, she was as ferocious as ever. When Webb was in her eage she would rub herself against him and would nestle her immense head against his bosom. She would open her red, yawning mouth and playfully take his arm between her jaws. He would ride upon her back round the cage, and would stretch himself at length on her back as on a couch. They rolled about each other, man and beast, like a pair of clumsy schoolboys wrestling.

Webb's performances were appreciated by the management of the concern also. John Morris, head of the Morris combination, had his lion-tamer out to champage suppers of the most ornate description. True it was that Webb's experience as a hodcarrier had not fitted him for polite society, but he was always defiant and at ease in his attitude, however coarse or unconventional it might be. And this faculty of believing in one-self, together with an impervious moral cuticle, is sure to seat its possessor at the right hand of king

Jonas Webb, like many other men of great daring and phenomenal recklessness, had a weakness for feminine charms. He was not married. He and his old mother had for years lived together. Not being possessed of a saving character he could never feel able to support a wife during his hodcarrying days. But now, with half a year's wages coming to him every day he saw his way open for the realization of his fondest dreams. Therefore he began to look about him for a sweetheart, and they are easily found by a man with £700 or so a month.

Jonas Webb, the lion-tamer, was a great catch, and all the pretty actresses set traps for him. But she who won the prize was Morris Bros.' great equestrienne, Señorita Teresa, or in plain English, Miss Martha Jones. Webb and La Señorita were in the habit of taking a walk every evening just after supper. As to the way in which they spent their time while on these delectable expeditions the reader much inform his own conclusions. One evening on returning from their star-gazing and love-making trip, they passed through the animal tent, which at that time was empty except for the snarling beasts and a few of their attendants. Just in front of Mme. Clee's cage Webb stopped, and in whispered tones begged his companion for something she seemed loth to part with. For a time-she was laughingly obdurate, but at last yielded to her escort's persuasion. He bent his face close to hers and pressed his moustache against the rosy lips of his fascinating charmer. In short he kissed her. And there, behind the bars, was Mme. Cleo, watchirg with blinking eyes their interesting performance.

It was Saturday night, and the tents were crowded to

It was Saturday night, and the tents were crowded to It was Saturday night, and the tents were crowded to their utmost capacity. About an hour after the return of the lovers from their ramble, and before the ring performance, Webb strode toward Mme. Cleo's cage, dressed in his most resplendant outfit. The tent was packed to suffocation with breathless people, who strained forward, trying to see the "most darling act ever performed on British soil," as the bills vauntingly declared. When Webb approached her cage the old lioness gazed at him with dull and seemingly indifferent eyes, But those who watched her closely saw the lifted tail was motionless. The trainer opened the outside door and stepped into the first compartment. Still the maneater stood silent and grim, with her eyes looking out over the expectant throng.

The performer closed the outside door and proceeded

The performer closed the outside door and proceeded to unlock the inner one. While he was inserting the key in the lock Mme. Cleo made no sign that she knew he was about. Nor did she move immediately when he flung the door wide open and stood before her.

When she reached the cage, coming face to face with the si ent lioness and her vic.im, she raised the weapon and pointed it straight at a spot just behind the man-eater's left shoulder. A moments' pause, and she pulled the trigger.

Crack! The heavy bullet went true as a die to its goal, and found a home in Mme, Cleo's heart. With a low moan the beast fell beside her victim's body.

Then all the people saw how it was that Jonas Webb had entered her majesty's presence so often with impunity. She loved him. Loved him with an almost human love. So nearly human was it that she could not resist the pangs of jealousy. Stretched out there at the side of the one man who had ever dared to place his hand upon her head, she licked his mangled face, and gazed with melancholy woe at the woman who had supplanted and destroyed her.

And all the while her-heart's blood was leaping in spasmodic jets up from a round hole in her side. Lower and lower sank the massive head. Duller and duller became the erstwhile flaming eyes. Slower and slower came her labored breath. And then, with a long, deep sigh, she sank upon her master's breast. Mme. Cleower dead. was dead.

BURIED TREASURE ON THE CORNISH COAST.

A correspondent writing to the Western Morning News, tells a curious story of vast treasure which it is said lies under the sea in the Lizard district. Every now and then, he declares, Spanish dollars more or less battered are found on the beach to the back of Gunwailoe Church, about five miles from the Lizard Head. In 1784 a galleon was wreeked on the spot. having on board, it is alleged, $17,000,000, besides bars of gold, which were to be deposited in London for safety during the unsettled state of national affairs in Spain. The greater part of this vast wealth is still buried deep between the sands and rocks where the vessel went to pleces, not far out from the cliff. At obb tide the water is about six feet deep, but owing to the exposed character of the coast and the fury of the broad Atlantic waves, the sea has never been smooth sufficiently long to give those a chance who have at different times gone to considerable expense and labor to recover the sunken treasure. From time to time hundreds of dollars have been picked up, and quite recently one was found. On one occasion a few years since, a gentleman found so many that the fact was reported to the Board of Trade, and a share of the spoil was handed over to the government. Scores of coins have also been found in the fissures midway up the cliffs, where they had been washed by the waves in a gale. battered are found on the beach to the back of Gunwai-

PROPER RECOGNITION.

[Omaha Bee:] This story is told of Senator Mason of Illinois, apropos of his resolution of inquiry into Germany's discrimination against American pork: A big pork packer from Cheago called upon him the other day and said:

"I cannot express to you how deeply appreciative all of us are of your thoughtfulness in introducing this measure. I listened to the reading of it and commend it as I commend you. It is well worded and meets the emergency. This act of yours shall not go without proper recognition, be assured of that. Our firm—"

The Midnight Waul.

That singst so sweetly on the nether wall, What inner torment vexes thy sad soul That all thy plaintive melody is made In minor key? Hast thou some grievous cause. Some strutting Tom, with whiskers fierce and curled, Thy mistress fliched? Some pert, rat-catching purs Upon a rival smiled? Ainck, sweet cat, Thy pain, whate'er its source, is manifest, And seems to rack thy very o'aphragm, So bitter is thy waul. Now, haply, cat, The liver fed thee by the kindly cook Hath festered in thy vitals (and I trow Dyspepsia may raise blazes with a cat As with a human.) O. I think the moon Gave quite a little lurch to starboard when Thou gavest forth that last three-cornered yowl, Which stopped the clocks in Harlem and dealt To half a million Hudson River shad? Yet what o' that? Have birds the right to sing? Ay, marry, have they! And a dog to bark? A horse to laugh? A barnyard cock to crow? Then why not yield thee right to caterwaul? Shall I, because thou choosest to salute The night with music, straightway paw the air In a distemper, and emit strange oaths, Heave brickbats at thee and a plague call down On all thine ancestry? Not so, O cat! Long mayst thou live to dodge the fusillade Of scantings, logs, rare books and furniture, Lead pipe, old boots and other brica-brae Shied at thee by the boarders. For, I vow, The sersonade thou'rt giving us tonight Is not more flendish than the grewsome plaint Some violinist, in a future age, Will wring from out thy poor defencelers gut When thou are dead!

The Army In the Drum.

A soldier sought the bartlefield.

The Army in the Drum. The Army in the Drum.

A soldier sought the battlefield
Where first in coat of blue
He passed before the Angel Doath
In swift and stern review.
The broken swords were sheathed in mold,
The rusty cannon dumb.
But in the tangled grass he found
An army in a drum.

The sticks were gone that sittled once. Tattoo and reveille,
The shell that took the drummer's life
Had burst the head in three.
But from the shattered sheepskin rose
A low, continuous hum,
The murmur of the rank and file—
The army in the drum.

For there the bees had built a hive,
And stored the sweets away,
From blossoms born of soldier blood,
The mingled blue and gray.
Where once the morning sky beheld
The charging columns come,
They pitched in peace their waxen tents—
The army in the drum!

Far enough from a modern sore called the City of Kobe and near enough to an idyll of a beach of the name of Maiko—Maiko? One autumn morning I was up before the sun, wishing to see the first awakening of things. The incredulous bay was rubbing its eyes at me, to see whether such an impossible miracle had, in these perverse times of ours, really come to pass. Just how long I remained there in that attitude I cannot say. One must indeed have the indiffernce of a mathematician, and the callousness of a man of the world to count the moments that pass with the ever-shifting charms of dawn off the Cape of Wada.

By and by to my right I saw a line of fishwives laugh their way toward the city. And one of them stopped at our cottage.

"Ohayo, good morning, O Tomi." We had been buying from her for over two years.

I could hardly hear her reply. A second passed and she raised her eyes to me. That was meant for a very very brave effort to smile through a heavy tide of tears. But it was a touching failure. Her eyes were red and she breathed in sighs. "Why, what in the world is the matter with you, O

A little shudder—so a sob shakes a woman, when it is too rigorously suppressed-and that was her only an-

A young woman of scarce twenty she was, brown with the sun and health and her oval face was very good and kindly to behold; her eyes looked with all the frank-ness of sea and her nature was as simple as the curlew. And from her hair and grace of figure, her neighbors came to know her as "our mermaid."

Naturally I would know the cause of her tears.

And the story was told me. II.

"So long, mother . . . off again! O, it's a jolly night tonight. The sea is dead and the fishes are there huddled together for the net. I'll bring you home the finest mess of fishes you ever saw!" This was the farewell which O Tomi's husband gave to his mother. "Good-by, fair sea and a good luck!" The mother's greeting came from beneath the futon, or thick padded cotton quilts, spread on the floor of the fisherman's hut.

For after the persistent wrestle of many, many years, Time at last had succeeded in throwing her down with no promise of ever putting her on her feet again.

III.

On the sands of the beach he was sitting the sun's on the sains of the beach he was sitting the sun's love caress left it still warm—the sea was calling to him. The smoke curled from his pipe just to show heaven and earth, the laziest thing dreamable. Meanwhile, happy fisherman, the twilight and his wife by his side, were trying to outdo each other in being meltinely tender to him.

The boat, net, bait, hooks—all were ready and he rose to pat the prow of the boat and give it a hearty hug. "When are you coming home, my man?"

She knew it well enough, but through habit, she asked

"O, early, early," his usual answer.

Swash! and the sea gurgied and laughed about the rudder, like a merry little girl hugging her chum.

En-ya, en-ya, en-ya!—half grunt, half chant of the fishermen and to the music they sculled away, her hushand and his mate.

The wife struck up one of those fishermen's sough.

And the idle breezes turned into an Acolian harp. IV.

O Tomi walked out of her hut. The morning breaths were just waking up, and arm in arm with Dawn they were treading out brocade on the yet sleepy surface of the sea.

Already a few boats were home. She walked down the grade and joined a group of fishwives at the water edge. By twos and threes, the boats came in and lighted the simple faces of the women waiting for their husbands.

"How is the catch?" and the response, "Nothing much . . . . sikataga naiwa!" were heard.

O Tomi was silent—she was still waiting. The very last boat except her husband's came home. By and by one could see how the fogs which had been trying to erase the dark outlines of the Awaji Mountains, were discovered by the sun and chased away pell mell into nothingness. Still the boat for the sight of which O Tomi's eyes were aching was behind the head land of Awaji Island.

At last it came.

At last it came.

When it was within he ling distance, 'How's the catch, uncle?" O Tomi slouted.

"Uncle" was the pet name which she gave to the partner of her husband.

The "uncle" saylied or within the partner of her husband.

The "uncle" sculled on without a word. The boat stuck its nose into the sandy beach. O Tomi jumped stuck its nose into the sandy beach. O Tomi jumped at the prow.

"Ei! take care!—it's dangerous!" Then he did not say any more; he did not look at her.

"Tell my man to come out here, will you? Is he in the bottom, uncle?"

The uncle was mute.

"What made you so late this morning? Hurry np, uncle, will you? I won't catch up with the rest of the wives today if you don't!"

But the uncle was still stone dumb. But the uncle was still stone dumb.

"Uncle, uncle, uncle!" and she laughed, remembering only that the uncle had been often grumpy.

Silence.

she remembered that she, for a second, had for got her man completely!
"My man! Oi Yokichi-don!"

"My man! Oi Yokichi-don!"

When no answer came she straightened herself and looked at the uncle. But he had his eyes screwed on the board of the boat and did not see the look of the woman. She climbed up onto the boat. She said nothing, did not even think that she could not speak had she tried to. "El! stop there! It's awfully dangerous."

He did not look up. He was counting the fishes and putting the largest ones into a basket, and one watching his intent gaze might have said that the uncle had never seen fishes before in all his life.

O Tomi ignored him. She was on a plank looking into the bottom of the boat. No shadow of her husband was there.

"Here," said the uncle, handing her the basket of fishes, "this is your man's portion. Take it!"

She took it. Too heavy even for her strong arm to hold, she dropped it with a bang. The uncle gave her all her man's portion and his own atop of it.

"But where is he?"

The waves beating the shore struggled into a speech.

The waves beating the shore struggled into a speech. The uncle's lips were silent.

The uncle's lips were silent.

Calming down from the first fury of excitement, she asked: "Did he stop off at Awaji, uncle?" Her husband had done such a thing a few times before, "Yes," said the uncle fiercely, looking at the water as if the innocent laughter of the Inland Sea were cursing his soul into an eternal perdition.

"Well, why didn't you tell me that before?"
Then looking at the few small fishes left in the fish well for the first time, she said: "Why, uncle, you've given me all the fishes; how's that?"

"Be quick about it, now. See there!" pointing at the fishwives who had finished their breakfast and were waiting for the slower sisters to join them to start out on their daily round.

O Tomi did not want to be late. When she staggered

O Tomi did not want to be late. When she staggered

"No! Tomorrow, neither—he isn't coming back at all!"

There was a low groan, and the heavy basket and O Tomi were on the sands in a heap.

"I lied; he isn't on the Awaji Island!" exclaimed the uncle with that hideous emphasis of an assassin who, not satisfied with his first fatal blow, would strike time and again the heart of the victim.

O Tomi's eyes, without the light of understanding glared at him.

"Lively, now, you'll be late!" the uncle cried.

Then the poor woman, as if she saw for the first time and all of a sudden, the fatal revelation in full, burst out in soul-wringing cries: "O Tomi . . . . O Tomi !" the fishwives called to her.

ishwives called to her.

When she heard them—strange force is the power of habit—she stopped crying like a child. She rose, opened wide her eyes, which were running over with tears.

"I'm coming!" she cried out to her comrades, breaking into a labored trot—the heavy basket made her gait very awkward. And a heavier weight—all the more crushing because it was right upon the naked heart in her bosom—was making her life a burden of lead.

She could not carry all that basket; she would leave the half of it at home; would come back for it later in the day.

the half of it at home; would come back for it later in the day.

"Will you wait for me a bit? I'll be with you soon," she cried to the fisherwives.
"Hurry, O Tomi," they said.
With her foot on the sill of the hut, she thought of her mother-in-law. Hastily she emptied about half of the fishes into another basket.

"Mother," she called cheerily to the sick in the bed.
"Yoklehi won't be home today. He stopped off at Awaji. Do you need anything, mother?"

"No, O Tomi."

After telling me the story—that is to say, I have mathered a very little of it from her words and vastly more from her sobs and tears—she sank down on our back steps. Her whole frame was a big, bruised, throb-back steps. Her whole frame was a big, bruised, throbbing heart.

But in a minute, as if an idea shot like a firework through her mind, she hastily dried her tears with her sleeves and, turning her face full upon me, gave me one of the sweetest smiles that ever kindled a woman's eyes. What was the reason of her strange behavior, would you ask? Well, such is the way we have in Japan (and I am rather partial to our usage and the standpoint of view, as is very natural) of suppressing our painful emotions and so saving our friend from any additional pain other than those from his own. Sooner, aye, yery much sooner—for the burden of our flesh is incomparably lighter than that of the heart—would a well-mannered Japanese throw a heavy stone from off his shoulder and heap it on that of his fellow-toiler, than to poison his friend with the woe of his own heart. So this sudden checking of her tears was a brave effort on O Tomi's part. But, say and do what we may, there is something stronger in our hearts than politeness or any acquired grace. And a second afterward—more correctly the fraction of it—there was a flood where the Bright star of a smile had been.

Quite nonchalantly-in the same tone, I ordered some fishes.
"We expect to have some guests today, what can you

Her basket was opened before me.
"Is this all you have? We certainly need all of this can't you bring us some more this afternoon?"
"Hai certainly, honorable master!" she gasped, amazed.

No time to stop and cry over the death of her hushand! And the fishes which had cost him his life had to be sold; food, and more important than that, the medicine for her mother-in-law must be bought.

And with the medicine the young widow hastened home. Her husband's partner met her at the door of the cottage. She stared at him awhile, but very soon tears robbed her of her sight. She could not speak to "Stop, O Tomi, don't go in."

"Why?" O, she knew that the uncle had no fault, but could not, somehow, help from using a sharp tone of voice.
"Recent "Because

"Because—"
She waited for his explanation; meanwhile fighting the tears which tried to throttle her.

"I've told it all to her, your mother," he said. "You could not have done it; I knew that."

And the spirit of murder, for the first time in her life, entered her child-like heart.

She rushed in, the arm of the uncle across the doorway making a very poor bar. How quiet it was within the cottage—so quiet that she at once poised herself on tip-toe. She thought, ah, the poor mother is sleeping the serene repose of a Buddha!

"I told you not to go in," thundered the uncle, "Hush, hush!" she severely gave vent to her annoyance.

ance. "Hush? Who can wake her up now? She is dead-

"Hush? Who can wake her up now? She is dead—dead, I tell you!"
He walked away.
The haggard, naked eyes of her mother-in-law had the gloss of a glass globe—in them there was no purpose, no light of life. Tomi felt her mother's brow. A marble chill responded to her touch.
"Mother, mother, mother!" she shook her gently.
No answer. Her finger, as if it did not know what else to do, pressed upon the lower lip of her mother-in-law. The lip parting disclosed the teeth—the teeth which were fast locked in death.
"E—c—ch!"
A heavy sound of a falling body.

"E-e-eh!"

A heavy sound of a falling body.

At about noon she came to herself. She could hardly see the ceiling because of the eager faces bending over her. They watched the return of consciousness with a religious solemnity and hush, those simple fishwives. They gave her some little water. She stirred.

"Ei, what's the matter? Get up? Tohomonai! not by any manner of means! You must rest, O Tomi," her neighbor, said.

"But I must.—I must get up. I must go. I'm strong enough, I'm all right now!"
"Go where? What are you talking about?"
"O, she has lost her mind, poor girl!" was also heard

"O, she has lost her mind, poor girl: was also heard in low whispers.

As she tottered down to the ground floor of the cottage, her neighbor, a good old woman, caught her by the arm. "What do you mean? Listen!"

She would not listen. When her friends fought her by force, she cried out as though her heart should be blown to pleces. What could they do.

She took her fish basket under her arm and started out.

"She'll kill herself, sure!" they sighed after her. I had been expecting her for some time and when she almost fell dead on our steps, I was by her side.

"Spread the futons in your room, O San!" called I to a girl. "Let's carry this woman there."

O Tomi raised her face—ashy and colorless, like the sea looked through the gauze of fog. She shook her head sidewise. No, she would not go.

"Why in the world did you come when you are so ill?" asked I, quite exasperated.

"Pardon me, sip pardon me. I had to sell the fishes; I had to sell the fishes. I have to pay for the coffin, and the priest, and the grave, too."

"Did you find your husband's body, then?"

"O, no, no sir." She broke down completely.

Between the thick-coming sobs: "His mother—my mother-in-law is dead—died while I was away!"

"What!" She'll kill herself, sure!" they sighed after her.

"What!"

"I did not tell her, but the uncle did! The news killed her!"

This companion of the laughter of the sea, there she lay, white as foam—this young wife of a fisherman, healthy and full of child-like charms, scarce out of the bud of life. The sea took her husband from her, and gave her no time even to wonder whether the sea weeds are kind under him in his lonely bedroom of rocks, in the cold, cold depth of the sea or if the sullen walls of an ocean current would mellow its tones as it sings a requiem over his frozen dreams!

Food must be had, and the medicine for her motherin-law as well. So she must go forth and hawk the fishes which the sea gave back to her instead of her husband! No time even for breakfast. But that did not matter much, after all, seeing that she could not eat.

Medicine in hand, at the threshhold of her home, she was told how uselessly she had spent her money! Her mother-in-law was no more!

No time was given her to weep. Again she was

No time was given her to weep. Again she was forced to march out, a basket of fishes under her arm. She must bury the dead; and she would not let her neighbors give her any money while she could get it herself.

Ah, what a thing is life!

And I, seated on a silk padded cushion, from day to day, and at the romantic death of an afternoon sun, drinking the pale gold saké-like twilight, utterly free from the thought how the morrow would bring its bread; never troubled how the cold may be tempered for my body and those of nearest me—and I cursed life because the letters would not arrange themselves to my satisfaction into a poem!

A MARKED IMPROVEMENT.

[John C. Freund, in Musical America:] When the now defunct Ward McAllister issued an edict declaring that there were only "400" families in New York society he did not create anything like the sensation that has been caused by the publication of Mrs. John King Van Rensellaer's book, "New Yorkers of the XIX Century," the first volume of which has just appeared. According to this good lady there are only thirty-eight

According to this good lady there are only thirty-eight families in New York society.

I am reminded of Robertson's celebrated play, "Caste." You remember the scene where the Dowager Countess is introduced to the drunken father of the pretty but virtuous ballet girl with whom her son has fallen in love. She is told that his name is "Eccles."

Regarding the man through her lorgnette she struggles with her memory for a time and then declares with decision, "There are no Eccles!"

When Ward McAllister reduced "society" to 400 families he rendered us all a service. Mrs. Van Rensellaer has rendered us all a greater service by reducing the number to "thirty-eight."

Just think of it. Only "thirty-eight" families to blush for out of a population of seventy millions!

Decidedly we are improving.

THE WOMAN OF THE TIMES.

• NAVANAN KANANAN KANAN KANAN KANAN KANAN KANAN •

HE Los Angeles woman who, clad in a waterproof dress of knee length and gum boots, turned a smiling and triumphant face to the pelting rain during week's storm, evidently believes that the to resume is to resume. There is In Brooklyn a Rainy Day Dress Club which has been meeting and talking regularly once a week for two years on how desirable it would be for women to wear appropriate dress in rainy weather. But not one of them has ever appeared outside her own dressing-room, even though she had to go to the club through the rain, in the costume upon which they have set their approval. It is suspected that they do not try on the dress even in the privacy of their own apartments without first drawing the blinds, locking the door and plugging the keyhole. There has been no palavering and no gab-festing in Los Angeles about rainy-day dresses, but, behold, the rainy-day dress is here, and its wearer braved the storm and waded the crossings without attracting more than an occasional admiring glance and word of praise. The occasional admiring giance and word of praise. The rainy-day dress is bound to come, even as the bicycle suit has won its way. The bicycle has done many wonderful things, but the most wonderful thing it has done, indeed, the one impossible thing which it has accomplished, has been the revolution it has effected in woman's ideas about dress, or, rather, in woman's habits of dress. For the usual woman's dress is due habits of dress. For the usual woman's dress is due rather to habits than ideas. The bicycle has accomplished in five years more than all the dress reform lectures and magazines and clubs could have done in as many centuries. It is as hazardous to prophecy what women will do in a case of dress as to predict what they will do in a case of love. But if the bicycle continues to hold its sway there are likely to be still more changes in her fout-of-door raiment. Nobody, either man, woman, or crank, could wish her to make any change in her indoor costumes, unless to make them still more beautiful, with lovely materials, graceful outlines, sweeping trains, ribbons and laces and ornaments and all beautiful things. For there is little enough of the beautiful in our lives, at the best, and there is all the more reason that woman should cling to it in her costume, since man has thrown it so entirely aside. But as far as her outdoor dress in rainy weather is concerned—and sometimes in dry weather, as well—there is every reason to hope that the power of the bicycle has not yet reached its zenith.

San Francisco ought to have its sobriquet changed to the "City of Suicides." There is seldom a day when the news dispatches do not report at least one suicide, and there are often two or three in the city by the Golden Gate. A curious person recently kept track of these grewsome affairs for a few days, and found that in one week, which was merely an average one in this respect, fifteen residents of San Francisco attempted to eject themselves forcibly from life. Some people might say that to have to live in such a climate as that of San Francisco is enough to make anybody want to die, and that that alone is sufficient to account for the astounding number who grow weary of life. But no one ought to hazard such an explanation inside the city limits of San Francisco, unless he wishes to die. If he were tired of living, he could insure no quicker and surer death. There may be others, too, who would say that the suicidal tendency which is constantly epidemic in our sister city of the north is only one manifestation of the moral decadence which prevails there. Such a one would surely find himself welcomed with open arms and effusive tongues, for if there is anything the average San Franciscan yearns for more than death it is to be thought "devilish wicked."

o, thou American Young Person, ever adorable! What a constantly bubbling well of delight, what an unceasing spring of joy and amusement and interest and sentiment thou art, even in thy most practical moments! The novel writers of England loudly and frequently lament that they are so hampered and bound down to the humdrum and the common-place and the conventional by the English Young Person that their struggling genius is likely to die of its leading strings. Why don't they immigrate hither, where the Young Persons are better fitted to be goads and whips and stings and prods to a lazy genius, than weights to hold it down? The young woman, who went to Randsburg, declaring she meant to have a gold mine when the first of January made relocation possible, and spent the last days of the old year reconnoitering and deciding which gold mine she wanted, and, then, at midnight of the new year, accompanied by two gallant and protecting old prospectors, struck out across the hills in the darkness and cold of a winter night in the mountains, and made her location and secured the mine she was determined to have—was ever anything more typical of the dauntiess, independent, straightforward, delightful young woman who grows up in the sunlight of our institutions and the free air of our mountains and plains? And the two old prospectors who gallantly gave their aid and protection to her enterprise—the picture would not be complete without them. The American young woman would not be possible in any other country, because no other country has produced the American Man.

The blessed rain has made some people think of the blessed snow it would have been in a colder climate, and long to make snowballs once again, and hear the fingle of sleigh bells, and feel on cheek and brow the tonic tingle of frozen air through which a cutter is rushing at a two-minute speed. A certain Angelena, those silver hair betokens 60 years, but whose eyes reveal not more than half that number, has been a loving and loyal citizen of Southern California for a quarter of a century. None can exceed her in love for our rose gardens and orange groves and elight in our sunshine. This winter she went back, for the first time, to the land of blizzards and snowstorms, and now she tella with sparkling eyes how she slipped out of the house, bare-headed and unwrapped, to stand in the falling snow until her white hair was crowned and her dress covered with the thick-falling flakes. "I've thought so many, many times I'd like to do that once more," she said, "and when I saw the snow coming down I wanted to feel it on me so badly I just had to do it." Another woman, who has lived more than half of her half century of years in this region went up to Mt. Lowe, the last pientiful snow that fell there, and for a whole day did nothing but ride down hill on a bob-sled, with, of course, the usual accompaniment of hauling it up again. "I did have such a good time!" she said when she came back. "I didn't feel more than 10 years old!" In Woodward's Gardens in San Francisco there used to be an old Russian bear, spiltnosed and shaggy, very amiable of expression and very ferocious of disposition. He came of a race accustomed to the long, cold winters of northern Europe, and to the necessity of hiding away and going to sleep during all those months. It had been well on toward half a century since he had known a climate in which there was much appreciable difference between summer and winter temperature, but every fall the entrance to the little tunnel leading from his pit, in which he was allowed to sleep in the summer, had to be closed up with heavy iron bars, or he would go in and would not come out again until the vernal equinox had passed. And all through the winter he would spend most of his time knocking his head, until he would wear the fur all off his forehead, against those iron bars and growling because he could not follow the commands of his antiquated, but tyrant, instinct, and hide himself in his den. Perhaps it is some such equally antiquated and unnecessary, but still tyrannous, instinct which makes people who can gather roses and oranges in midwinter long for the touch of snow and the feel of frozen alr.

That is a curious difference, exemplified in a recent local murder case, in the conduct of men and of women

That is a curious difference, exemplified in a recent local murder case, in the conduct of men and of women under certain similar conditions. When a man has been tricked, deceived, deserted, by a woman whom he has trusted and believed in—and it must be admitted even by the most loyal defender of the sex, which may forget, but never forgives, that such things do sometimes happen—he does not throw vitrol in her face, nor plunge a knife into her vitals, nor shoot her in the back, nor send poison to her in some article of food. Usually, he lets her go her way in peace and forgets her as soon as he can. He is likely even to forgive her, and think of her with compassion. It may be, of course, that the woman's way of violence is the better way, considering the good of the race, and that the sooner people given to tricking, deceiving and deserting are removed, the better for humanity. But putting aside the cruel, though comforting, optimism of such a view, one is compelled to wonder whether this difference in conduct is due to some basic difference of sex which will last forever, as long as the human race shall live, or whether it is merely a manifestation of that indulgence with which man is accustomed to regard the wrong-doing of woman, from cheating at cards to murder. If the newspaper philosophers who insist that the "new woman" is losing her privileges by insisting on her rights, are mistaken, perhaps this indulgence will vanish also, along with seats in crowded street cars and the carrying of her wraps. And perhaps the time will come when the women who have lied and deceived and deserted will suffer quick and violent retribution, even as men are likely to do now. Then they may be trusted to exterminate each other, after the manner of the Kilkenny cats.

When Nuts are Ripe. A crisp wind flitting the gold leaves down From the whimpering beeches' glimmering heights; The gilt sun tanning the walnuts brown And tinting the woods with scarlet lights;
The metallic rasp of the squirrel's call;
The bluejay's scream in the maples, then
A swish and thus as the ripe nuts fall—
And we laugh with the glee of "nutting again."

Then it's over the hills when the day is new,
And the hoar frost gleams on the wayside grass,
And the webs in the hazel drip with dew
And bar the path where the cattle pass.
The ways are wet to the eager feet
That romp in a race to the nutting ground,
But the bypaths dry ere the nutters meet
Where the treasurers of tree and bush are found.

Then it's over the hills when the daylight wanes Then it's over the hills when the daylight wanes
And the heart is light from the happy guest.
Of the burden that cheers while its glad weight pains
Till the muscles thrill for the joy of rest.
So we watch the gold and the red grow bright,
And echo the squirrel's gay call, when
The hoar-frost gleams in the autumn light,
And we dream of the pleasure of "nutting again."

On the Sea Throne. Not yet the viking's hands are weak, Not yet his blood grown pale; Not yet his ship has turned her beak And spread a flying sail.

Not yet the Iceland peak has thawed Before the southern sun; Not yet the man of gales has warred And left the field unwon.

Not yet his hand, at close of fight, Has hauled the raven down; The gleam beneath the bird of night Is still the sea king's crown.

Turn back, oh, southern man, thy prow; The viking bars the way. The berserk lines are 'thwart his brow; Tempt not his wrath this day,

Long ages have the Iceland fires
Lit up the northland pack;
The viking's hand is as his sire's—
Turn back thy prow; turn back!

For, till the old red blood flows white,
And war-trained eyes are dim,
The viking cheers at close of fight;

LAY SERMONS.

E LOVE to believe that we have a Heavenly Father whose hand is upon the mainspring of the universe and who orders all things "according to the counsels of His own will." We do not believe that God made this great universe of suns and worlds, and set them to circling in their vast orand then retired somewhere into the unfathomable realms of space leaving them subject only to the blind forces of nature's laws, with no farther concern regarding them on the part of their Creator. What is that which we denominate as natural law but the uniform mode of God's action? Law cannot exist without the mind force behind it as an impelling and controlling cause, so behind all the so-called laws of nature God stands as a governing Power.

We have heard a good deal of scorn heaped upon the proposition to pray for rain, and now that it has come in such rich abundance, these same scrners say: "Oh, it would have come anyhow, just the same if these religious cranks hadn't prayed for it, all in obedience to the laws of nature, whose established laws you don't suppose that prayer is going to change, do you?"

No; but, dear scoffer, do you know all about the laws of nature, and do you know what forces superior to them God may bring to bear upon them in answer to prayer, which, while not violating them, may for the time being modify their action sufficiently to bring about certain results? Do you dare to assume for one moment that natural law is greater than and beyond the con-trol of the Infinite? Do you not suppose that there are laws of which we know nothing, laws that are higher and perhaps more far-reaching than those which we and perhaps more far-reaching than those which we have perceived and which we in some measure understand? Are we not constantly discovering something new in nature's wonderful realm, hitherto undreamed of forces and elements which are essential in the great economy of created things? Shall we say for one instant, "God cannot do beyond what I can think?" If God can make all things, can He not do all things, or has He made a machine and set it in motion that is greater than Himself and beyond His control?

Not for one moment can we believe this, but we do

God can make all things, can He not do all things, or has He made a machine and set it in motion that is greater than Himself and beyond His control?

Not for one moment can we believe this, but we do believe that our Father holds the operation of all things in His hands, and that His almighty will is the controlling force of the wide universe which He has created. And God loves to be inquired of by His people, and even the drouth may be the instrument in His hand to draw His children nearer to Him, and leading them to feel their dependence upon His care. There is no blind Fate in the universe that is able to visit us with evil; we are in God's hands and it we trust Him all will be well. Evils may sometimes come upon God's children; but they are disciplinary in their nature and ultimately prove a blessing, bringing the sufferer into closer communion with God, enlarging his spiritual life and making him realize more fully his dependence upon the Giver of all good. In all things, over all things, and above all things, is Our Father, infinite in His goodness and eternally changeless in His love. His care for us never rests and He is ready to hear and answer when we call unto Him aright. So let us never despair, but be glad in the Lord always, having faith in His readiness to hear and answer our prayers.

DESERVES HER SALARY.

An ambitious young woman who this time last year was a stenographer and typewriter, receiving $20 a week for her services with no prospect of ever getting more, became discontented with her lot, says the New York Commercial-Advertiser. She pictured herself growing old, being obliged to give up her work and trying to live on what she had been able to save of that $20 a week salary.

When the talk of war began and a man who looked into the future said to her: "Why don't you study Spanish? Who knows but we will all have to speak it soon? You might as well begin now." The jest gave the discontented one an idea and she bought a Spanish primer the same day. In a week she had secured a teacher and had learned to pronounce her j's like y's and her y's like e's. Last week she accepted a new position as secretary, stenographer, translator and general valuable accessory in the office of a steamship company that ships people and parcels to Cuba. Her salary is $40 a week.

She does not think her improved prospects due to "fuck." She lived all spring and summer in Spanish boarding-houses, assiduously cultivated every greasy and tiresome boarder for the sake of his or her conversation, ate oily dishes and paprika, and garlic and onions, and permitted herself to be serenaded nightly by a black-eyed caballero who stationed himself in the back yard with a mandolin and addressed love songs to "the third floor back." She does not regret any of her sufferings, for she learned Spanish. But she thinks she deserves her $40.

ONE WOMAN'S ADROITNESS.

[New York Sun:] On an uptown Broadway car the other day an elderly, spinster-looking woman vehemently protested to the conductor against receiving five 1-cent pieces in change.

"That's United States money, madam," replied conductor, "and I wish you to take it," and the feeling brute" passed on through the car raking in nickels. The woman was nonplussed for the moment, but presently she saw her chance for revenge as another woman entered. Quickly changing her seat she adwoman entered. Quiel dressed the newcomer:

"You haven't paid your fare yet, have you? No? Well, will you kindly oblige me by giving me a nicke! for these five cents and then give them to the conductor? He insisted on my taking them, and I appeal to your sympathy to belm me out."

to your sympathy to help me out."

The second woman promptly grasped the situation and acquiesced. The conductor was stumped and unable to conceal his discomfiture. He finally grabbed the fiv coins when they were tendered and, stamping back to the rear platform, rang up five fares by mistake.

BISHOP POTTER OF NEW YORK.

A DIGNIFIED ECCLESIASTIC WHO HAS A MANY-SIDED LIFE.

By a Special Contributor.

THERE are two leaders in New York society. One of them is Mrs. Astor; the other is Bishop Potter, and the latter is far and away not only the most powerful and picturesque, but very much the most exclusive of the two. Bishop Doane of Albany may wear smart gaiters and an orthodox apron and Cardinal Gibbons a stately hat, but Bishop Potter comes nearer than any other man in America to representing the prestige of the Archbishop of Canterbury or the authority of the Pope.

Ostensibly, he is head only of the Episcopal diocese in New York; in reality he represents more varied responsibilities, greater financial schemes and unique accomplishments than any other man in the metropolis. He is, first of all, bishop of the richest diocese in America, administering, with the skill of a William H. Vanderbilt on church property that, when it came into his care, represented a round $20,000.000. Since he has taken charge of this sacred fortune, so to speak, he has increased it at bounds, often of a hundred thousand a year. This has been done by very long-headed investments and by inspiring rich parishioners to glorify the church by donations.

Added to these cares, Bishop Potter has undertaken the biggest building scheme since the Capitol at Washington was put up. That is the Cathedral of St. John, the Divine, which, when it is completed, will represent a great deal over the $30,000,000 estimated for its erecbecause of these countless calls on his time, he is the busiest man in the city.

In spite of the enormous labor he must get through with in every twenty-four hours; in spite of his hale sixty-one years, and the architect's conservative estimate that it will require twenty years more to see the completion of the great cathedral, Bishop Potter speaks always with pleasant confidence of the time when he will conduct services in the great chancel and dedicate the building. His guarantee for this is that he comes of a long line of Potters, three of whom were bishops, all of them mighty aristocrats, and every one reached a ripe old age before they were gathered to their fathers. Though not a rich man, in the New York sense, nor assuming the airs of one, he keeps his health good, and his back straight by indulgence in a single luxury. Like many another sensible, hard-working man, he spends an early hour every day in Central Park on horseback, whether it rains or the sun shines. He learned this from his friends, the athletic British bishops, who assume far more style in living, dressing and entertaining than the New York prelate.

A street car is his favorite conveyance when he is not covering miles on foot. In manner, he is proud of being a good American with broad church principles, and his dress is as simple as that of a curate.

As his daughters grew up and got ready to marry, he welcomed sons-in-law who boasted nothing more than comfortable means, and it is his habit, frequently enough, to lay down his napkin in the middle of the most brilliant dinners of the season to fill an engagement in the slums of the city.

Of the Century Club Bishop Potter has now been president for several years giving as great care and attention to the interests of that organization as to his vast responsibilities in the cathedral and he bids, fair to enjoy the presidency as long as he likes. The shrewdest members admit his wonderful executive ability; they quote his keen remarks; one of his toasts of speeches will evoke more applause than any other half dozen men speaking in an evening, and the non-believers and the Catholics, the sternest Presbyterians and the most loyal Jews, will not hesitate to serve and praise him, act on his committees and forget all differences of belief in their, confidence in this liberal-minded churchman, whom men, after all, admire most for his utter fearlessness, and who, unfortunately, is the last of his name in the church, with no son to succeed him.

THE ACE OF SPADES.

TRAGEDY AVERTED BY DUPLICATE CARDS IN THE SAME PACK.

SAME PACK.

[Chicago Inter-Ocean:] "Some people say the ace of spades is unlucky," said a ranchman, "but I guess it's a standoff. And my reason for this belief is based on a peculiar incident. It was up at Little Missouri. I strolled into one of the games one night as a looker-on. One of my boys was playing—a lad by the name of Bronson. There was an ill-favored, shifty-eyed cuss sitting opposite him, and I judged by the remarks that passed that there were strained relations between the two. However, the dealer smoothed things over until it came to a hand where only these two were left in. They lifted and cross-lifted each other red-hot. At last my lad called.

"Spade flush,' announced the other man.
"Then this pot's mine,' said Bronson, 'for I've got the same hand with the ace at the top of it.' He spread it out on the table.

"We all said something about the singularity of two flushes of the same suit being out against each other, and Bronson started to rake in the chips.
"Hold on there,' called out the other man; 'I've got an ace with mine—ace, king—that beats you!'
"He laid his cards out. There it was, sure enough. In a twinkle Bronson had him covered with a gun. 'Now, damn you!' says he, 'I've had enough of your work!'

"We all stood paralyzed, waiting for the report.
"The other fellow turned pale as death, but looked at Bronson steadily.

"Don't shoot!' he said. 'As God is my witness, all "'Give him a chance, Bill!' says I.

"Bronson recognized my voice.

"'All right,' he says. 'I'll give him a chance. If he can explain it, all very good. If he can't, down comes his shanty.'

"Here the dealer broke in. 'I want to say, gentlemen, that I had no hand in this. If there's been any crooked work I don't know of it. I think you'll believe me when I say that.'

"He was noted for running a square game, so nobody had the least suspicion against him. Besides, he had nothing to gain by it.

"Listen!' called out a man from the end of the table. 'Just before that hand was dealt we had a new deck of cards, with different backs from the ones we had been playing with. Now, let's open another pack and see. If there's any defect in it.'

"If there is, Bronson, I think you ought to let him go; if there ain't, why, do as you like about it.'

"We all agree that that was square, so a fresh pack was brought and opened. The dealer laid them down one by one, face up, in a big circle, so that everybody could see. The room became as still as the tomb. You could plainly hear the spluttering of the lamps and the sound of the cards as they fell on the table. It was a strange sight.

"The threenth card was the ace of spades. That sound of the cards as they left on the date.

"The thirteenth card was the ace of spades. That looked bad and a sort of sigh went up. Then they kept coming and kept coming without a sign of anything being out of the way with them. The strain told on all of us. The dealer's hand shook so he dropped two of the cards together.

of us. The dealer's hand shook so he dropped two of the cards together.

"'Damn it, be careful,' says somebody.
"I don't like the job,' answered the dealer. 'But I'm doing the best I can.'

"The next two cards seemed about five minutes apart, but at last they dropped and we looked at the spread carefully. No use, they were all right a pack as ever got shuffled. Now there was but the one left, and a man's life hung on it. The dealer put it down on the table and stared at the back of it. Twice he reached for it, and twice he drew his hand back. Then he got up from his seat and left the table.

"'Somebody else turn it over,' said he; 'I can't.'
"Nobody moved. I wouldn't have touched the thing for a hundred thousand cold. Bronson's enemy drew a deep breath.

"'Let me?' he whispered.

"Bronson nodded 'Yes.'

"The man slid his left hand along the table, still keeping his eyes on Bronson's. His fingers closed around the card. He looked up, and his lips moved. Then he kind of braced himself and slapped it over.

"Lord! What a yell went up! Another ace of spades!

"Bronson stuck his hand out. 'Pardner, I was dead wrong,' says he. 'Will you have a drink with me?'

"'Sure!' answers the other man."

There is a peace wherein man's mood is tame: Like clouds upon a windless summer day The hours float by; the people take no shame In alien mocks; like children are they gay. Such peace is craven bought, the cost is great; Not so is nourished a pulsant state.

There is a peace amidst the shock of arms
That satisfies the soul, though all the air
Hurtles with horror and is rude with harms; Life's gray gleams into golden deeds, and where The while swords slept, unrighteousness was done, Wrong takes her death blow, and from sun to sun
That clarion cry, "My country," makes men one.

splendid altars, the windows and organs, etc., that at his persuasion his millionaire admirers are already beginning to supply. Ultimately the cathedral will stand as a monument costing near $50,000,000, to the ambition and energy, the diplomacy and enthusiasm of one man who is very far from a millionaire himself, though millionaires, with the exception of car-drivers, cloakmakers, and the like, are his best friends.

It is a good deal because of this same cathedral that the average New Yorker always talks about Bishop Potter, and points him out boastingly. They will tell you he is building an American Westminster Abbey, a monpment as big and fine as anything Europe can show, that he is the spiritual guide and chosen chum of more moneyed aristocrats than any man in the town, and yet he isn't a snob. It is perfectly true that no Vanderbilt or Astor feels that he or she is properly christened, married or buried unless the bishop is on hand to give blessings and benedictions, that he is asked to lay foundation stones of Newport palaces, take the handsomest débutante heiresses into dinner, be present at yacht launchings and preside at the smartest functions, still he is not by any means a mere rich man's chapiain.

If he is asked to more dinners in the course of a season than he could possibly eat, it is because he represents, with Joseph Choate, one of the well-known men who is at once a wise and witty conversationalist.
Though his wit is often caustic, smart society loves him none the less for it, while every hostess feels that the presence alone of the bishop lends a vast dignity to her table. It is perfectly certain, though he never chooses to conceal his beliefs and prejudices, that he is regarded with perfect friendliness, even admiration, by men and yoman of all creeds, and on all municipal occasions
Bishop Potter is called upon to appear prominently.
The pbulic relishes his brief speeches. There is no one in New York who can make a few remarks with the consummate grace, appropriateness and distinction, and plest sort of a man and a brother when he visits the striking cloakmakers or gives an informal reception to the locked-out typesetters.

He can bring the temperature of a dirty red-hot anarchist down 50 deg. in five minutes; he can talk angry men into calm reasonableness and affectionate attention by a half dozen sentences, and the same man who would refuse a reporter a ten-minute interview will by preference spend his summer among the slum folk and cancel dinner engagements because a delegation of strikers want his presence and advice. Down in Stanton and Hivington street, where there is more swarming, degraded, poverty-stricken humanity to the square yard than anywhere else on earth, Bishop Potter is regarded as a benevolent, approachable, helpful friend. He enjoys himself at the social extremes and he has about as much toleration for a reporter or a simple, easy-going, middle-class citizen as Torquemada had for an avowed heretic.

The average New York newspaper man would just as leave be sent out on an assignment on the shores of the open Polar sea as to get an interview from the master of the white marble diocesan house on Lafayette place. He is apt to get no interview and to carry in his memorry ever after the recollection of a tall, well-preserved man, buttoned closely in a black clerical coat, with a spare, clean-shaven face, like that of an English ecclesiastic, and a pair of wonderfully hard steely

Perhaps somewhere along in the class with bores and reporters, the advanced ritualists are relegated by the bishop. A ritualist is apt to act on his nerves, somewhat as the dissenters used to effect Sidney Smith, though on the other hand he has small sympathy with puritanical sentiments. A man can be a good bishop and algood clubman at the same time is his belief, and if anyone doubts his capacity as a jolly good fellow, they should drop into the Players on Founders night or into the Century Club when some special function is on hand. It is plain enough to see, then, that beside the great ladies of society and the horny-handed sons of toil, the bishop of New York possesses a hold on the affections of another element in society, the business men, whether

His office hours were, as civil Governor of the province, from 8 to 10 at the Palace, from 10 to 1 at military head-quarters as military Governor, and again from 1 to 5 t the Palace. But he seldom left for home before 8 in the evening, and in most cases he devoted his time to accumulated business until midnight. I had waited three weary hours to see him on the afternoon in question, and when his aide, Lieut. Hanna, finally told me that my turn had come, I passed through a doorway that had already given admission to two score of people that day. Gen. Wood turned from signing the week's city pay-roll to greet me, and he was as cool and courteous as a man who had nothing but leisure. It was after a brief chat on the condition of affairs in the province, and the possibility of carrying out his plans for modernizing the city that he used the words just quoted.

"If they will only let me alone!" There was a dread, a fear in the exclamation that conveyed far more than can be expressed on paper. It was the cry of a man who had builded well, who had seen his creation take shape, who had a sincere and heartfelt interest in his labor, yet felt that any hour might see a change that would undo everything.

The people of the United States do not know what wonders are being performed in that ancient city on the eastern end of the island, Santiago. They have no conception of the miracles this modern Hercules is working. When it is understood that this man who, a few short months ago was merely an army contract surgeon with little executive experience and barely 38 years of age, has stepped into a city suffering from three centuries of misrule at the hands of the Spanish oppressors and, practically unaided, brought it into the first rank as regards sanitary cleanliness, safety to life and limb, orderliness and municipal prosperity, and all this in a period less than half a year, there will be due credit given him. credit given him.

this in a period less than half a year, there will be due credit given him.

Col. Theodore Roosevelt, who is a competent judge, calls him "a model American military administrator," and adds, "I was frequently in Santiago after the surrender, and I never saw Wood that he was not engaged on some one of his multitudinous duties." In that lies the keynote of Gen. Wood's marvelous success. He never rests while there remains anything to be done, and he gives personal attention to every detail. I called at the Palace by appointment early one morning last November. Gen. Wood was already at work. He glanced up and said briefly, "I will be delayed a little longer than I expected. I am sorry, but I must go over some plans for the new boulevard, and there's a delegation from San Luis due here within a few minutes. Please meet me at the Military Hospital at 9 o'clock. I've got to inspect the new wards and look after the boys." As I left the Palace I met the delegation. There were two dozen Cubans in the party, and each looked as if he not only wanted an office, but was prepared to talk Spanish by the hour to secure it. The general reached the hospital at the appointed time, nevertheless. Five minutes later I was given an opportunity to see what an energetic man who thoroughly understood his work could accomplish in the course of a half hour.

The Military Hospital in Santiago is a great onestoried structure covering an immense amount of ground. Besides the many offices there are wards for over two thousand patients. Extensive repairs were under way at the time of our visit, and Gen. Wood not only carefully inspected the repairs, but visited every occupied ward. It was both interesting and pathetic to note the welcome he received from the ailing soldiers.
It was not the formal meeting between a general and an enlisted man, but rather the sympathetic greeting of soldiers who had fought on the same battlefield.

We found one small ward containing, a solitary occupant, a corporal who had carried his gun almost into the shadow of death. A Mauser bullet wound was fast sapping the poor fellow's life, and he lay stretched out upon the little iron cot waiting for the turn that would settle for him the most momentous question of human axistence. He looked up as the general bent over him, and smiled wanly. There were no words exchanged, nothing but a firm clasp of the hand, but it was more eloquent than the tones of the earth. "Poor fellow,"

In the convalescent ward were a number of soldiers picturesquely clad in pajamas. They hurriedly rose and saluted with a warmth and respect refreshing to see. One young man whose pale face betokened a long period of suffering, placed his hand upon the back of a bench for support. Striding over to him, Gen. Wood said kindly: "Keep your seat, Martin. Take all the rest and comfort you can. We want you back in harness again as soon as possible." To another, a burly sergeant on crutches, the general added with a smile, "Make haste with that leg of yours, Wilson. It will soon be Christmas, and we'll need you in the football games." As we left the ward I glanced back and heard the sergeant say with a chuckle, "Wants me in the Seated in his office in the Palace in Santiago de Cuba with his desk piled high with mail and papers and documents, with the ante-room filled with officials and civilians and Cubans of every degree, Gen. Leonard Wood, military and civil Governor of the province of Santiago, uttered the above words with a fervor there was no mistaking.

In the ride down Calle Santo Tomas every demonstration of respect was shown the general. Every passer-by without exception either touched his hat or removed it entirely. And there were friendly smiles everywhere. Before we had traveled far word was passed along the street, and the doors and windows soon framed eager faces. "Viva el general!" shouted a voice from the crowd, and the "vivas" followed with a vim. At the corner of Calle Enramadas a little urchin, half-clad, but with a bright face, stepped into the gutter and cried shrilly, "Gobernador muy bueno. Americanos muy buenos. Viva!" (Governor very good, Americans very good.) It was a triumphal procession.

Three-quarters of an hour later we were climbing up the ladder of the transport steamship Port Victor. "Want to look around a bit," said the general to the captain-quartermaster in charge. "You will take several hundred convalescent soldiers north, and they must be given every possible comfort." The inspection, brief though it was, took in every part of the vessel devoted to the convalescents. The place 'tween decks where they were to sleep, the galley, the hospital, and even the dispensary, received close attention. Then, when he was fully satisfied, Gen. Wood piled into the launch and we were taken hastily ashore. When I left him at the door of his office the ante-room was crowded with people waiting to see him. Apparently his day had just commenced.

YANKEE DOODLE AN OLD CHANT,

ITS ROUNDABOUT WAY OF REACHING YANKEF LAND.

[BY A SPECIAL CONTRIBUTOR.]

ANKEE Doodle is one of the oldest songs it the world, and at different periods of an unparalleled career has belonged to England, to the once vast mpire of Holland, and to the Roman Catholic church, where it probably originated, somewhere about the year 1200 A. D. If you happen to be a musician and do not believe that such an undignified ditty ever could have been intended for solemn purposes, play it over on a pipe organ, very simply and slowly, and as the maj-esty of a grand old papal chant fills your soul, all your doubts will vanish away.

Several hundred years ago the good people of Holland thought so much of "Yankee Doodle" that they adopted the tune for a harvest song and made up new words for it. Mary Mapes Dodge gives one of the verses in "Hans "Yanker didee dudle down, Didee dudel launter. Yankee viver voover vown, Botermelt und taunter."

Nobody knows exactly what this verse meant, but the lines interest us, because they are primely responsible for the word "Yankee," etc., for the familiar English version of Yankee Doodle.

Soon after being first sung, this quaint verse became so popular among all classes in Holland that it became a truly national song. It was sung in livelier time than the old chant which it supplanted.

than the old chant which it supplanted.

While the great naval war of the sixteenth century was in progress, the English, under Admiral Drake, caught the tune. Much to the surprise of everybody, England broke the mighty sea power of Holland, and when the fighting was over the English people sang mocking parodies of the old song against its hated authors. Yankee was understood to mean a Dutchman. Since the Dutch were sharp traders, the popular meaning of the word came to be a shrewd, hard-headed, ungracious sort of a fellow. Holland then tried to forget the song, and it thus passed into the hands of another nation.

All England sang varying words to it till Oliver Cromwell's time. But, one day—the day that the great reformer rode into Oxford at the head of the rebels to battle with the King's army—he wore an immense ostrich feather fastened to his hat by a band of heavy slik "maccaroni" cord. Yankee Doodle then being a term of contemptuous ridicule, one of the courtiers of the boastful King composed the famous refrain:

"Yankee Doodle came to town Riding on a pony; Stuck a feather in his hat And called it maccaroni."

And called it maccaroni."

This rhyme did not hold its first popularity very long, because the rebels were successful, and probably it would have been forgotten entirely, had not the old King's son returned to power a few years later. Meanwhile, the reformer had sung the tune to many innocent, nonsense verses, which soon spread to America.

The best known of these was Lydia Fisher's jig, which made its appearance in New England about the year

1713, and became famous as a dance song. The words

"Lucy Locket lost her pocket; Lydia Fisher found it. Not a bit of money in it, Only binding round it."

"Lucy Locket" was very popular till 1775, when British regulars were encamped on Boston Common, and the natives of the city and surrounding towns were organizing into companies of "minute men" under John Hancock. While as yet there had been no open war, the feeling was very bitter among the colonists, who were held in such contempt by the soldiers that they were taunted with the familiar tune to the words:

"Yankee Doodle came to town a For to buy a firelock. We will tar and feather him, And so we will John Hancock."

And so we will John Hancock."

This made the colonists so angry that they declined any longer to sing an air put to such contemptuous words against themselves. A few weeks later something happened that changed their minds, for it was the destiny of Yankee Doodle to become, apparently forever, the undisputed property of America.

In April, 1775, Lord Percy marched out of Boston with a brigade of British regulars to disperse the rebels assembled at Lexington and Concord. Amid cheering and flying flags, the bands played "Yankee Doodle," and the red-coated soldiers sang boastfully the old words which had vainly ridiculed Oliver Cromwell over a hundred years before. Perhaps, when they began to sing, they had forgotten how, even before Cromwell's time, the tune had been turned against its very authors. He must have remembered before returning to Boston, for at Lexington the vaunted soldiers of King George were routed by a handful of patriots, who, when they saw how things were going, went wild with joy, and taking the words right out of the mouths of their adversaries, shouted in exhultation the song which had been aimed at them in contempt.

During the fight back to camp the regulars were perpended with shot from behind stone wells and trees.

During the fight back to camp the regulars were pep-pered with shot from behind stone walls and trees, so much to their own discomfort that Lord Percy, in a fit of disgust, next morning confessed that after marching out to the tune of "Yankee Doodle," they had danced to it all the way home.

One of the latest and aptest historical—if least literary—versions of Yankee Doodle is a stanza, said to have been sung by some of the Rough Riders in Cuba, after the surrender of Santiago. It ran something like this:

"Yankee Doodle came to town Wearing striped pants on, But Spain she saw so many stars That now they need expansion."

"Yankee Doodle" has already belonged to the three great families of the Caucasian race—the Latin, the Teutonic, and the Anglo-Saxon. In seven centuries it has been carried into the heart of four of the greatest political powers of history. Now that expansion is an accomplished fact, who can tell what new freaks destiny will play with it?

The English capitalists do not send national trade commissions. They send their own financial agents out over the world with a good bank account behind them. They are always on the lookout for good things, and they can tell you just about what percentage nearly every new enterprise pays.

Buenos Ayres has a number of foreign banks, whose capital runs up into the millions. The London and River Platte Bank had branches in Brazil, Uruguay and London, with its chief office in Buenos Ayres. Its capital is about $7,500,000, and it has $5,000,000 reserve funds. Its deposits amount to about $80,000,000 reserve funds. Its deposits amount to about $80,000,000, and on all time deposits it pays interest. This bank keeps something like £1,000,000 of gold on hand. The Anglo-Argentine Bank has $2,250,000 capital, and the capital of the London and Brazilian Bank is equal to $7,500,000 of our money. There are strong Italian banks in Buenos Ayres. There are German banks and Spanish banks, and, in fact, the only country that does much business with the Argentine which has no direct banking connections with it is the United States.

These banks do not speculate. They make two clearings every day, and so far as I know no foreign bank doing business in the Argentine has yet falled. The business is just as safe and legitimate as that of the United States, and if a syndicate could be organized in New York with several million dollars capital, to do business in South America, it might pay big dividends. Such an institution might be gotten up by the directors of insurance companies and other companies who lend money, the stockholders to be men who are interested in shipping goods abroad. A manager could be sent from the United States to the Argentine to open the bank and connections could soon be established which would make the institution pay from the start.

Through such a bank Americans could learn the standard of the business firms on the east coast of the Atlantic. It would enable a large portion of our trade to he done on safe credits instead of start cash and

It would also show the Argentines that we have enough faith in them to invest money in their country. They say that the people of the United States have always professed a great friendship for them, but so far have never done anything to help the country along. They would like to see some visible evidence of our affection, and say that if the United States will establish a bank and a steamship line they will be ready to believe in them.

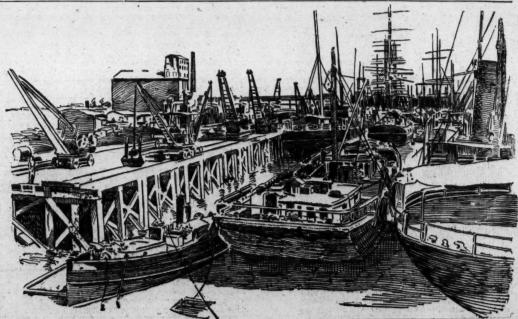

The commissions of so-called American capitalists which have visited the Argentine Republic to encourage trade have, I am told, done more harm than good. One was sent down a year or so ago. It was widely advertised, and the Argentine officials and capitalists made great preparations to receive it.

When the commission arrived it was discovered many of its members were commercial travelers, who had aken advantage of the low rates of transportation to from cable orders are uncertain. There is a steamer from Europe to Buenos Ayres almost every day in the month, and one can leave Buenos Ayres for Europe nearly every day.

The steamships which go to Europe are much finer than those which go to the United States, so much better, indeed, that passengers to New York often go there by way of Liverpool or Southampton rather than direct. The fare is not very much more and the time not much longer, although the distance via Liverpool is greater by more than 3000 miles.

The steamship lines which ply between Buenos Ayres and Europe, as well as those which go from New York to Buenos Ayres, are making money. I am told that the lines between Buenos Ayres and New York annually divide profits to the amount of 15 per cent. of their capital stock. They charge from $160 to $175 for passage, and their freight rates are considerably higher than the rate to Europe.

rate to Europe.

The European steamers are managed by companies with large capital. The Royal Mail Steam Packet Line, which plies between Buenos Ayres and Southampton, has a capital of $4,000,000. Its ships are very good, but the rates are high. The Compagnie des Messageries Maritime, which plies between Bordeaux, France, and Buenos Ayres, has a capital of $11,000,000, and it pays an annual dividend of from 5 per cent. to 6 per cent. The North German Lloyd, with ships from Buenos Ayres to Bremen, has a capital of $9,000,000, and there are other English, German and Italian lines in which large sums are invested, and upon which big dividends are paid.

The North German Lloyd, with ships from Buenos Ayres to Bremen, has a capital of $9,000,000, and there are other English, German and Italian lines in which large sums are invested, and upon which big dividends are paid.

A line of American steamers, as estimated by Secretary Francois Jones of our legation at Buenos Ayres in an excellent report on this subject some time ago, would have a chance at the $113,000,000 worth of trade between the United States and the east coast of South America. It could reduce the time between New York and Buenos Ayres from a month to seventeen days, and allow a half-day's stoppage at each of the larger ports on the way. Then the journey from New York to the Argentine would be almost a pleasure trip. The freight rates could also be reduced, and goods could be sent to the Argentine more quickly from New York than from liurope. At present we import about $80,000,000 worth of coffee, hides and other things from the Atlantic Coast of South America, and we export about $20,000,000 worth of goods in return. Such a steamship line would materially aid in evening up the trade and would in the end put the balance in our favor.

A general idea prevails that the Argentine Republic is a very unsafe place for investments. This is not so. Property is now as stable in the Argentine as elsewhere. But the country went wild about nine years ago. It then had a boom in which both the Argentines and foreigners took part. This boom almost ruined it, and during it there was undoubtedly a great deal of fraud upon the part of the government officials as to their handling of the government finances and funds.

Today this craze has passed. The people have learned a lesson from it and property is now stable. The biggest things are now managed by foreigners, and from year to year the government holdings grow less. A foreigner's property is perfectly safe. He has in fact equal rights with the naturalized Argentine, and he is subject to no heavier taxes.

All businesses, however, have to pay a license ranging from

New York.

The great goom which burst in 1890 came from the rapid growth of the country after 1880. Its growth was discounted over and over again, and in ten years more than $662,000,000 worth of stock was floated, and of that more than $500,000,000 totally lost. There were land companies, railway companies, insurance companies, banks, and in fact almost every kind of institution capitalized at millions. Most of these have entirely disappeared from the market, while the shares of other companies have declined 99 per cent. I doubt whether there have ever been anywhere such loose business methods as prevailed here at that time.

The officers of the government were in many of the

as prevailed here at that time.

The officers of the government were in many of the deals. The very highest officials speculated with government money, and through the government banks allowed millions to be loaned on mortgages on worthless property. Europe sent vast sums over to the Argentine to fill the gaps, expecting to get tens of millions back, and when the bubble burst the Baring Brothers and other long-established London firms came near going to pieces with it. to pieces with it.

Today the chief speculation on the stock exchange is in the money of the country. The brokers buy and sell gold, which is up today and down tomorrow, or rather they sell the credits of their country. In other words, the most of their business is in buying and selling their own notes.

There is no more interesting place in South America than this stock exchange of Buenos Ayres. Its doors are accorded by featment in livery, and from 12 to 1 and are guarded by footmen in livery, and from 12 to 1 and from 3 to 4 p.m. you may meet upon its floors the brightest business men of the Argentine.

The membership costs almost activities.

The membership costs almost nothing and the dues The membership costs almost nothing and the dues are less than $3 a quarter. The result is that there are 700 brokers and nearly every prominent business man of the city is a member of the exchange. The stock exchange is not unlike a business man's club, and if you could enter it without knowing where you were going you might well imagine yourself in the stock markets of New York or Chicago. The only difference is the language, for the men are of all nationalities and they dress and look just as their brother brokers do in London, New York or Chicago.

The same mutations of fortunes exist, and each man can tell you his own story of ups and downs—of fortunes lost and won. Speculation makes and loses money just as quickly in Buenos Ayres as in New York, and as the commercial relations of the United States and the Argentine grow closer I predict that the Yankees will hold their own on this stock exchange with the Italians, German and English, as they scramble for the financial plums of the Argentine Republic.

IT WAS JIM ALLISON,

QUIET MAN WHO WAS ARRAIGNED BEFORE A JUS-TICE OF THE PEACE.

[New York Sun:] Justice Sabath did not recognize the redoubtable "Jim" Allison of border fame in the meek-appearing man who stood in the West Side Police Court the other day charged with disorderly conduct, but it was the same old "Jim."

"It was this way, Judge," said Allison. "I tried to part those ducks that were fighting, and the crowd jumped in on me. Just as I drew my gun an officer came along, and the game was off."

"Your intentions were doubtless good, Mr. Allison,' said the Justice, "but it's against the law to carry concealed weapons, and I'll have to assess you $3 and costs."

"Here's your coin, Judge, and will somebody please show me where I can buy a ticket out West, where guns is a part of a man's outfit?"

Time was when Flagstaff, Ariz., now a quiet, peaceful village of 1200 inhabitants, was about the hottest town in the West. That was when the Atlantic and Pacific road was being built, and the Apaches went on the warpath whenever a chief had dyspepsia and felt like killing in the West. That was when the Atlantic and Pacific road was being built, and the Apaches went on the warpath whenever a chief had dyspepsia and felt like killing someone.

Perhaps that was the reason that Jim Allison once took refuge there, for Jim was a killer himself in the old days, and his deeds of prowess are told today in Arizona to interested auditors. Allison belonged to a famous coterie of men who never seemed to realize the sensation of fear. There was his brother Bob, Moryan and Wyatt Earp, Doc Halliday and Bat Masterson. Their motto was like that of Dumas' "Three Musketeers"—"All for one and one for all."

Although each of these men had killed, not one of them ever committed a murder. Their shooting was all done in the interest of law and order, and was undoubtedly necessary at the time and place where it was done. All of them were marshals of different tough towns in the West, and when one had a particularly tough town to deal with he asked assistance from one of his confreres. This was the case with Doc Halliday in Durango, Colo., in the early '80s. The town was too tough for him to deal with as Marshal alone, so he invoked the aid of Jim Allison and made him assistant. Durango at the time was filled with Mexicans, who were very turbulent and contrary to the accepted characteristics of the race would fight hard when drunk. Allison tried to arrest one of them one night and was unable to do anything but kill him. The Mexican was a prominent man in his race and had many relatives in town. A storm of indignation was raised by the shooting and many threats were made against Allison.

Allison went down to Flagstaff, where he boarded at the Grand Central Hotel, a three-room structure of boards and canvas, and appeared to be so, peaceable that he did not gain the respect of the citizens. One day Allison was seated at a table in the dining-room, facing the door. A Mexican entered, gaudy with sombrero and sliver trimmings. He glanced around the room, saw Allison, and marched over to his table, his spurs ji

"What for?"
"Shooting the Mexican."
"What? For killing a greaser! That ain't no crime."
"The Judge says it is."
Allison thought for a few moments about the situation, and then decided he would accompany the Marshal.
"Gimme your weapons," said the latter, as Allison rose from the chair and signified his intention of going to court. He was armed with a Winchester and two big "Can't do that," was the response. "I'm a stranger here, an' I won't go unarmed. If you want the guns you must fight for 'em. I'll go to the court peaceably enough."

The Marshal looked at the weapons, and at the man who carried them. Then he thought discretion was the better part of valor. Without another word the pair mounted their horses and rode to the Courthouse half a mile down the single street of the town.

"Here's the prisoner, Your Honor," said the Marshal, as they marched into the courtroom.

Judge Martin looked down at Jim, who was seated in a chair facing him. He had loosened the revolvers in his belt, and his Winchester rested lightly across his knees.

"Disarm the prisoner," said the Judge, in an angry

"The prisoner won't be disarmed," replied the Marshal.

"No, Your Honor," said Allison, rising to his feet and keeping his Winchester so that he could use it in a second, "I don't mean any bit of disrespect to the court. If you want to try me for killing a greaser I'm perfectly willing. I admit I killed him, but killin' one of them skunks ain't no crime. But it ain't fair to have me go unarmed. I don't know what I'm up against. I ain't afraid of the court, but I don't like the crowd in the courtroom. They may all be my enemies. What could I do against fifty men if I didn't have a gun? Why, I couldn't make no more fight than a codfish."

The Judge grew still more red in the face. He pounded on the desk till the echoes almost reached the Grand Cañon seventy miles away.

"This court is adjourned," he cried, "until the prisoner is disarmed."

With that Allison arose from his chair and, swinging his Winchester in front of him in a nonchalant manner, he marched through the crowd to the door. His finger was on the trigger ail the time, and, knowing the way he had shot the Mexican, no one dared interfere with him. Reaching the open air Jim mounted his horse and rode away. That was the last of his trial for killing the Mexican. Mexican.

rode away. That was the last of his trial for killing the Mexican.

Allison has the marks of four bullet wounds in his body, which are the result of as brave an act as was ever performed by two men, even in the West.

At the time it occurred Doc Halliday was Town Marshal of Tucson and Jim was his assistant. The decent element of the town and the surrounding country were engaged in a war with the "rustlers." One day eight of the rustlers came into Tucson, got half drunk in their rounds of the salcons and killed an inoffensive citizen. Then they marched up and down the main street of tho town, yelling out defiance to the authorities.

"Jim," said Doc Halliday, "we must get those fellows or be eternally disgraced."

"We'll get 'em," was the laconic response.

With that he brought out two double-barreled shotgus, with the barrels cut off to within a foot of the stock. Each was loaded with about fifty buckshot, which, the barrels being so short, would scatter in every direction. Thus armed, the two men marched down the street in single file, so as to afford a less conspicuous mark. When about fifty feet away one of the rustlers fired his revolver at the approaching men and a general furtillade followed.

fired his revolver at the approaching men and a general The officers discharged both barrels of their shotguns, and 200 buckshot went flying into the crowd. The range was short and the work was as effective as that of a Gatling gun. Four of the rustlers fell to the ground dead and the rest of them were wounded. Allison lay in the street with four bullets in his body. It was thought for a long time he would die, but he finally re-

Doc Halliday, who was not wounded, and citizens who came to his aid arrested the other four rioters and took them to jail. This was the last fight with the rustlers, and the names of Doc Halliday and Jim Allison are held in reverence at Tucson even to this day.

CHEAP LEGAL ADVICE.

[Paducah (Ky.) Sun:] The other day an old fellow slouched into Attorney Oscar Kahn's office on Legal Row, and introduced himself as Mr. Smith, Jones, Brown or something, of a neighboring county. He said he wanted to consult a alwyer, and was accorded a seat and one of the attorney's sweetest smiles.

He then explained that while he was away from home the Sheriff or some deputy had attached his wife's sewing machine and bureau for taxes. He didn't propose to tolerate such imposition, he declared, and came to Paducah to consult a lawyer about it.

"What is the amount of taxes?" inquired the lawyer.

"Lemme see—a dollar and twenty-eight cents," was the reply the reply.

The lawyer could not conceal a smile, but masteried as say: "Well, Mr. Smith, if you want my advice, it is to go back and settle that small amount. It looks like the easiest and best way out of it."

The old fellow thought a moment, and replied that he would. Answering, he asked: "How much

"Oh, nothing, sir," was the reply. "I won't charge you anything for a little advice like that."
"But I allus pays fer whut I git, and want ter pay yer jes' the same."

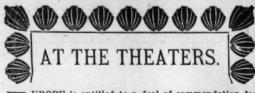

"Oh, that's all right; come in again some time when you need advice on something more important, and we'll square it then."

"Naw, I want ter pay it now. Jes' squeal out. Ef it's 25 cents, I'll pay it. Ef ye want fifty, there it is!" And he threw down a half-dollar and left.

THEIR FRIVOLOUS CLUB.

[New York Evening Post:] It was while the recent convention of women's clubs of the State was in session in New York that a new club of rather an unusual character sprang into existence. This is a little circle of eight women who are banded together without president, dues, or any sort of red tape, for the avowed purpose of being frivolous. "We decided," said one of the members (all of them, it should be said, are devoted clubwomen of the conventional sort,) "that we women are taking ourselves too seriously. We are doing everything from the thoughtful, difficult standpoint, and while we do not in the least decry the value of this effort, we do feel that it would be well to 'frivol' occasionally, so we have formed this little circle. We are to meet once every month in aphabetical order at the home of a member. Even the date of the monthly meeting is not fixed, but rests with the hostess. The simplest sort of luncheon, consisting of three courses only, and simple courses at rests with the hostess. The simplest sort of luncheon, consisting of three courses only, and simple courses at that, is provided, and each member is compelled to tell a funny story, or relate a funny experience or sing a funny song if she has the talent, or contribute in some way to the gayety of the occasion. The circle is intended as a protest not only against the seriousness of women, but against the extravagant hospitality of the time, which is eliminating easy social intercourse. Nowadays to offer any sort of hospitality to one's friends, means caterers, favors, prizes and usually professional entercaterers, favors, prizes and usually professional enter-tainers. That, we consider, makes hospitality too serious and kills neighborliness in the true sense of the term. We are not starting any crusade, however, or doing anything in the world except amusing ourselves.

A slump has come in the cut-rate stock companies. Disbandments have occurred within a month in New Orleans, St. Louis, Chicago, St. Paul. Milwaukee, Minneapolis, San Francisco, Brooklyn and seven smaller cities. These failures have been caused by overdoing and badly doing what is under favorable circumstances a good doing what is under favorable circumstances thing—the fairly adequate performance of wisely-old plays at low prices of admission. A dozen o resident or anizations are thriving deservedly.

UROPE is entitled to a deal of commendation for the unfailing regularity with which she supplies the American vaudeville houses with novelties in the various fields of endeavor, most affected by this class of theatrical people. Whatever any citizen's aversion may be to the patronizing of foreign stuffs in preference to the home-products article, the first objec-tion has yet to be registered to the latest importation in vaudeville, from London, Paris, Vienna, St. Petersburg, or other European music halls.

The frequency with which these Old World centers are drawn upon for entertaining material is exemplified in the Orpheum's bill for the coming week.

There are eight features on the programme. Of these, four are direct importations, and four of American origin. One "turn" is brought from Russia, one is from Paris, one from Germany, and one is English. The newspaper reader or student of the whether "legitimate" or vaudeville, can hardly fail to be struck with the fact that the European and other attractions, played in the high-priced vaudeville houses of New York, are seen on the Coast almost instantly upon the close of their New York engagements, and sometimes before playing in the metropolis.

In Koster and Bial's theatre, or rather music hall,

New York, whose boast it is that the most and the greatest European vaudeville stars have played there first, in this country, the price for seats are from 50 first, in this country, the price for seats are from 50 cents to $2. The artists who make it possible, by their drawing powers, for such prices to be charged, are brought to the Coast, at once, and necessarily at a greater expense than a New York management involves, and here the maximum price of admission is the minimum in New York. That is, the least accepted at Koster & Bial's is the most demanded here. Those who profess to find meat for mystery in the generous patronage awarded vaudeville here and in San Francisco can perhaps discover the solution of the thing in the foregoing facts.

Francisco can perhaps discover the solution of the thing in the foregoing facts.

Apropos of Nat Goodwin's new piay the Criterion says:

"Let us stretch a hand of kindly welcome to 'Nathan Hale,' the play in four acts by Clyde Fitch presented by Nat C. Goodwin at the Knickerbocker Theater on Monday night.

"In the press of foreign plays, not merely un-American in the characters and the scene, but in the underlying feeling, this live American product, comes happily before us. And in good time, too. Our authors, our managers, our players must dare to be American. A great many splendid American boys from the plow, the ranch and the college dared so to be in the year just gone, and we have not done worshipping them yet. It is, therefore, first of all a duty to say well-done to Mr. Fitch and Mr. Goodwin for that they have run counter to the fad of the foreign and the snobbery of the nouveau riche, and given us a clean, wholesome American play, centered on a sadly beautiful figure from the days of Sturm and Drang in American history.

"It was not Mr. Fitch's purpose to pitch his drama in the key of antique tragedy, but to take young Nathan Hale at his schoolmaster's desk, with his petty trials and trivial comedies, and lead him thence step by step without pomp or parade of language to his doom. In this view he has spun with art and simplicity a mere thread of plot—but since that thread passes through the fingers of the fates, is, in fact, the thread of a noble human life, presently to be severed by the shears of Atropos—the thread suffices. We see him, at first the patriot in his school in love with his lovely pupil; we see him later a continental captain taking the task of the spy upon him; we see him next inside the British lines and witness his capture. Lastly we see him be task of the spy upon him; we see him next inside the British lines and witness his capture. Lastly we see him be task of the sound of a dead march played as it were, on soft, muted horns. It touches the human and stimulates the patriotic nerve.

to the sound of a dead march played as it were, on soft, muted horns. It touches the human and stimulates the patriotic nerve.

"It is not necessary to complain of the extra lightness of touch in the opening acts. Mr. Fitch had many judicious things in view in so treating these early episodes. He thought of his actor and his public, too used perhaps to furnishing and accepting whipped syllabub, and he concluded to proceed by contrast from the high light of the noisy schoolroom to the deep shadow and silence of the gallows. It has been done, too, with a nice literary touch for which we are especially grateful. It advances Clyde Fitch markedly in status as a dramatist.

"Mr. Goodwin and Miss Maxine Elliott act with sincerity and effect within the lines laid down by the author."

"To wish the play a career of success is natural to every lever of good work and sound Americanism."

Speaking of himself, David Belasco, the well-known playwright, gave the following insight into his own ideals:

"I believe that more than half of success lays in the ability to work without ceasing," said the author. "Personally, I have striven all my life; labor is the only thing which does not seem to fatigue me. When I leave my desk I become tired, nervous, III. Once or twice my acquaintances have come to me during an unusually hot summer and have told me that if I did not allow myself to rest immediately I was sure to break down. I have taken their advice, a gun and fishing tackle, a stock of light literature, and a train for some mountain resort. But a very few days there has generally sufficed to light literature, and a train for some mountain resort. But a very few days there has generally sufficed to weary me and make me glad to return to my toil.

"Like most men who write without writing against time, I operate rather by fits and starts than with any deliberate hours laid out before me. Sometimes I am busy only three hours a day, and again I may go to my desk early in the morning and remain there until late the next afternoon, occasionally lying down on the couch for the sake of temporary relaxation. Once I mearly worried my family out of its wits by working is in no wise objectionable, the Operahouse can be rented, except on a Thursday night."

What a snap that committee will have.

at all.

"I rarely labor on prescribed lines. In proceeding with a play I first form the central idea and then relate it vaguely in a scenario form that finally serves more as as memorandum than anything else. To this I frequently refer, but the story and its incidents generally develop as I materialize the characters I have found necessary to spinning my yarn. It seems incredible that a man can work in any other way without danger of his product being made stilted and formal. To me casiness of style is essential. I do not believe in a dramatist making an exhaustive study of other men's plays, for that is sure to curb his originality and make him a mere machine. A knowledge of theatric construction is needful, of course, in building for the stage, but with me that knowledge is an instinct, and seldom has any definite effect on the straightforwardness of my tale."

[Kansas City Star:] Everybody who is at all familiar with Ada Rehan's delightful manner of illuminating with Ada Rehan's delightful manner of illuminating comedy roles was quite confident that she would play the title role of "Mme. Sans Gené" as none of her predecessors could play it. Not long ago Mr. Daly, who seems to have shared the general opinion, secured the play and last Monday evening Miss Rehan made her first appearance as the washerwoman—duchess. The result, sad to say, was not that which was so confidently expected and the disappointment that was felt pervaded every notice of the performance. It seems that when Catherine Hubscher was a washerwoman Miss Reham made her a duchess miss Reham made her a duchess and when she was a duchess Miss Rehan played her like a washerwoman. George Clark played Napoleon and about the only hit of the performance was made by White Whittlesley, who was last season leading man of Lewis Morrison's company,

"The management of the Operahouse should not rent it to traveling companies carrying girls in the cast. Nothing is known of the character of these girls who are traveling; they are quite apt to be gay girls. Nothing ought to be booked except 'Uncle Tom's Cabin,' male minstrels, 'Little Minister,' 'Old Homestead,' without detailing a committee to see the attraction in another town. If it appears to the committee that the company

Papinta, one of the greatest favorites who ever played at the Orpheum, is to begin her third engagement here next week. She is now in San Francisco, winning golden encomiums for the new dances which she has invented and executes with such grace and skill as belongs only to Papinta.

Manager Myers is planning for a "Papinta day" during the dancer's engagement at the Orpheum, when a reception will be held at the theater in her honor, and souvenirs of the occasion distributed.

THE WEEK'S ATTRACTIONS

THE WEEK'S ATTRACTIONS.

THE WEEK'S ATTRACTIONS.

The Louis James, Kathryn Kidder, Frederick Warde combination will begin a week's engagement at the Los Angeles Theater, tomorrow evening. In addition to the three stars, a company numbering some twenty-six people will be in evidence. The repertoire and its order will be as follows: Monday and Friday evenings and Saturday matinée, "The School for Scandal;" Tuesday and Thursday evenings, "Julius Caesar;" Wednesday matinée, "Hamlet;" Wednesday evening, "Othello," and Saturday evening, "Macbeth."

Each play will be mounted with excellent scenery and furnished with superb costumes, Managers Wagenhals and Kemper having determined to make their productions compare favorably with the distinction of their organization, believing that the public will fully appreciate their efforts to surpass every enterprise of like character before the public.

It has been the almost invariable custom for the legitimate star to surround himself or herself with a mediocre company and conventional settings and to depend upon a single name to attract the public. In this instance there is a combination of legitimate stars, while the great triumvirate is in turn surrounded by an exceptionally strong organization.

Louis James has endeared himself to the American people through a long and brilliantly successful career as leading man and star. He has been identified with a most varied line of characters. He seems equally at home in heavy tragedy or light comedy. He has a most attractive personality of the precise type best adapted to broad versatility. Few actors have been so generously endowed by nature to fill the position now occupied by Mr. James. During the coming engagement he will be seen in a line of varied characters.

Frêderick Warde, who for several years was associated with Mr. James in starring tours/has also had the most fruitful experiences and a most interesting career. No player of heroic characters is better known or more justiy admired. In the present repertoire, Mr. Warde will recall to many the achievements of his earlier days, when, as a stock actor he played all kinds of roles and made himself one of the most deservedly distinguished young actors of that time.

Kathryn Kidder has had just the kind of experience to fit her for the place she occupies in this company. She distinguished herself as a leading woman especially in New York and other eastern cities, and then at one bound, the assumption of the title role in Sardou's fanciful comedy, "Madame Sans Gene," placed herself in the foremost rank of American actresses. Her success as a star is fresh in the minds of all playgoers. She impressed her audiences alike with her charm of personality and her attainments in art. She is thoroughly conscientious as to detail, believing that a high regard for dress is a necessary accompaniment for histrionic ambitions.

It will be welcome news to Nance O'Neil's many admirers in this city that Manager Shaw has succeeded in perfecting arfangements for an extension of the young tragedienne's season at the Burbank. Nance O'Neil is more talked about than any actress who has been here in many a day. The popularity this youthful actress has attained in the few years she has been before the public is not to be wondered at. One has but to see Nance O'Neil to realize that she is fascinating and magnetic to a degree, and that her strong personality makes a lasting impression upon all who witness her powerful impersonation of the classic roles.

The many standard plays included in Miss O'Neil's varied repertoire are so infrequently seen upon the local stage that it is not strange that the Burbank is crowded to the doors when such a coming star as Nance O'Neil appears in the roles made famous by the greatest actresses that ever trod the boards.

A wide variety of plays, six in number, ranging from the emotional to the tragic, have been selected for presentation the coming week, forming a repertoire that none but an actress of great versatility would dare attempt. A new version of the popular emotional play, "East Lynne" will be presented Monday night and Wednesday matinée; Tuesday night, "The Jewess;" Wednesday night, "Oliver Twist," both of these plays being given by special request.

The story of "Leah" is that of a young Jewess who is loved by a Christian. The latter lives in a small town into which Jews are prohibited from entering. Through a well-laid plan they manage to meet one another and after a while the young man makes up his mind to tell his father of his love for the Jewess. The father and the schoolmaster of the town lay a plan to bring about a separation between the two young people and are successful. The story relates the discovery of the trick after the young man had married another young woman; of the terrible curse heaped upon him by the Jewess and of her return in later years in a more forgiving mood.

Of Miss O'Neil's

young woman; of the terrible curse heaped upon him by the Jewess and of her return in later years in a more forgiving mood.

Of Miss O'Neil's portrayal of Nancy Sykes, the San Francisco Call speaks as follows:

"She played the part as it was never played before in this city. Nancy is a character that demands of an actress strength, health and frank brutality. There is no mincing matters; no delicate compromises. The part will stand for no feminine blandishments. It is hard and terrible; in these qualities lie its spell and its grim pathos. Miss O'Neil does not spare an atom of her vanity in playing it for all that it is worth. She was large, husky, dark and unpretty to gaze upon, and she moved like a ship in a storm; but she was the Nancy Sykes of Dickens and we were all in goose-fiesh of appreciation."

Thursday night Miss O'Neil will present for the first time in this city, "Guy Mannering," and local theatergoers will have their first opportunity of passing judgment upon what is said to be a most spirited interpretation of the role of the gypsy, Meg Merrilies, in this romantic drama. The great Charlotte Cushman won the most prominent of her grand achievements in this character, and now, America's young tragedienne, Nance O'Neil, undertakes the popularizing of this intense role. Miss O'Neil's performance is as vigorous in conception, as it is startling, even electrical, in execution. Miss O'Neil created a furore in the piece when she appeared in it for the first time at San Francisco.

This great play will be repeated Friday night. "Ingomar" will be the bill at the matinée Saturday and an elaborate production of McKee Rankin's famous western drama' "The Danites," will be given Saturday and Sunday nights.

The Orpheum's bill, which goes on tomorrow evening, is peculiarly rich in European and American novelties. There are five new acts to be presented, leaving but three hold-overs, and these the best of last week's bill. The Rappo sisters, two maids from Russia, dancers with great reputations for skill and grace, have the foremost place on the programme. They were the leading attraction last month at Koster & Bial's Music Hall in New York, and come heralded as the most wonderfully clever exponents of terpsichorean art ever seen in this or any other country. Their engagement here is expected to prove highly successful, as a deal of interest has been created in the act, because of praise unusual, and, indeed, unprecedented, received by them in San Francisco.

Francisco.

Willy Ozeola is another European proposition—an equilibrist, who has just finished a three weeks' engagement at Koster & Bial's, where his feats were conceded to be unexcelled in every way. He opens here before going to San Francisco, contrary to the Orpheum's usual policy. It is promised by the management that nothing similar to Ozeola's act has ever before been seen here.

that nothing similar to Ozeola's act has ever before been seen here.

The Deltorellis are a team of French musical grotesques, who combine, it is said, considerable musical talent with fun-making powers of no slight proportions. Jane Whitbeck, the famous "Pas-Ma-La" girl, a leading vaudeville attraction in the big eastern houses, but never before seen on the Coast, is given a prominent place on the bill. She sings and dances after a fashion "peculiar to herself."

Anna Teresa Berger is known the world over for her cornet playing, she having until recently been of the famous Berger family of musicians. It has been some time since a musical act of this sort has been included in the Orpheum's bill, and Miss Berger will doubtless find her talent warmy appreciated.

George Fuller Golden has proved so popular that Manager Myers has persuaded the San Francisco office to extend his engagement another week, and "The Friend" of Casey" will therefore continue to scintillate on the Orpheum stage. Rofix, the phenomenal chin-balancer, and Mme. Pilar Morin, Rose Eytinge and Clement Bainbridge, presenting "That Overcoat," complete the bill.

A testimonial will be given Tuesday afternoon at the Los Angeles Theater for the benefit of certain members of the defunct David Henderson Company, whose interests call them in different directions from the city. They will endeavor, by their united ability, with the assistance of other competent artists who are now here filling engagements at the different theaters, to give an entertainment, excellent throughout, and so varied in make-up that it will be of interest and enjoyment to all classes. Through the courtesy of H. C. Wyatt and the management of the Kidder-Warde-James combination, the use of the theater has been given and the services of all employés connected with it have been offered and accepted. Marceau has donated a frame of pictures for the lobby. The theater orchestra, will contribute the music. The members of the Henderson Company for whom the benefit is given, will play the well-known farce-comedy, "A Gay Deceiver," in which the telented young actor, Asa Lee Willard, will assume the leading role, and a prominent part will be taken by Russell Bassett, whose sterling ability is familiar to all play-goers. Other members of the cast will be the clever comedian, Harry F. Adams, Carrie Clark Ward and Lotta Bassett.

Pilar Morin, Rose Eytinge and Clement Bainbridge, through the courtesy of T. J. Myers of the Orpheum will present their popular comedietta, "That Overcoat," and George Fuller Golden will contribute one of his monologues. Edward M. Bell, who was leading man of the Henderson Company during its existence, will give one of his famous readings from Bret Harte. Hazel Edell Simon will sing, and several of the attractions coming to the local theaters this week will do their share in making the entertainment a success. The complete programme will be printed Tuesday morning.

PLAYS AND PLAYERS.

Mrs. Fiske may add "Magda" to her list of plays next Annie Russell's continuance as a star is now assured by a contract with Charles Frohman for five years, and next season he will provide a new play for her. Olga Nethersole will bring out "The Power of Wealth," by Max O'Rell, before the close of her Wal-lack's engagement.

Julia Marlowe may begin her term at the Knicker-bocker with a dramatization of Charles Major's novel, "When Knighthcod Was in Flower."

"When Knighthcod Was in Flower."

William Gillette has resumed work on a Conan Doyle detective drama, the first draft of which was burned in the Baldwin Hotel fire in San Francisco.

Cissie Loftus is making a big hit in New York—partly by her elever imitations and partly by refusing to appear at Koster & Bial's Music Hall because there have recently been exhibitions there which she considers indepent.

Belasco's adaptation "Zaza," produced by Mrs. Leslie Carter in Washington Christmas night, has made a lasting impression there. According to eastern advices "Zaza" will run "The Christian" and "Cyrano de Ber-gerac" a close race for popularity.

Stuart Robson has arranged with Theodore Burt Sayre for the American rights of his new comedy, "Two Rogues and a Romance." Mr. Robson will take the part of an English diplomat with a crusty exterior but a warm heart. The scene of the play is in Washington and the story tells of the romantic love of an Ambassar's daughter for an Italian gambler, who is masquer-ing as a nobleman.

In one of his interesting talks the other day Bronson Howard, the noted playwright, hit off the dramatic student capitally. He is of the opinion that they succeed because they differ from all other students. They study drama because they want to-most students are such under parental compulsion, or because it is such under parental compulsion, or because it is the proper thing.

Novelli, the Italian actor, is said to have put into the mouth of a character in "The Merchant of Venice" recently in a Paris theater, to please the anti-Semites, a proposition that the ships of Antonio were wrecked by the co-religionists of the maligned usurer. He also cuts away ruthlessly those parts of the play which do not give him sufficient prominence. To compensate for these losses he has added an entire scene, which will not be found in any edition of Shakespeare, to give him full opportunity for the exercise of his powers.

MUSIC AND MUSICIANS.

ERR ARNOLD KRAUSS, violinist, returned Thursday after an absence abroad of nearly two years, and again assumed the leadership of the Burbank Theater Orchestra. During his residence here of several years, Herr Krauss, by his scholarly musicianship, as soloist, orchestra leader, and teacher, established himself as a very valuable factor in the best musical growth of the city. Such an one, indeed, as could ill be spared from any place, and his re-turn is welcomed cordially by all musicians and musicloving laymer who have, either actively or passively, interest in the development of this department of the interest in the development of this department of the arts here, at heart.

While abroad Herr Krauss visited London, Paris and other continental cities, centers of musical culture, and for one year he was in Brussels, where he studied constantly with Cesar Thomson, one of the world's greatest violin virtuosi and who, as a teacher, stands at the head of his profession. Herr Krauss was accorded the exceptional privilege, aside from his own lessons, of the more intimate and informal association of a friend, and some part of nearly every day found him at Cesar Thomson's home listening to the instruction given to others, or reading music and playing with this king among violinists. While in Brussels Herr Krauss joined the symphony orchestra ranks and played under the direction of Dupont.

the symphony orchestra ranks and played under the direction of Dupont.

After a summer spent with his wife's relatives at their country place in France, Herr Krauss was summoned to this side of the Atlantic to join Emil Paur's forces in New York. Theodore Thomas also sent for him to cometo Chicago, but the message miscarried and he did not receive it until after he had signed with Paur. The management of the New York orchestra went to pieces in a few weeks, however, and Victor Herbert wired Herr Krauss to take the position of second concert-master in the Pittsburgh Orchestra, which he did.

In spite of advantageous offers in both Paris and London for the season, Herr Krauss accepted the New York engagement "because," he says, "when one has grown accustomed to American life and American ways of doing business, the old country palls on one after a short time." That is why he crossed the ocean this fall; and as he feels that "of all places in America Southern California is the most attractive, the most livable," the reason is again apparent for his decision to leave Herbert and the Pittsburgh Orchestra and cross the continent when the offer from the Burbank management reached him.

the continent when the offer from the Burbank management reached him.

Herr Krauss is a conscientious, unassuming, sincere musician, intelligence and discretion have always been apparent in his work, he has a reverent devotion to his art, and his accomplishment which was scholarly and of a very high order when he was here before, has without question broadened and become more finished with his study abroad. Therefore he is doubly welcome, for the record he will make with his own instrument, and for the influence he will exert in various ways in the musical field here. musical field here.

Of Gerome Helmont, the wonderful boy violinist who is to appear here under J. T. Fitzgerald's management January 27, 28, and 29, at Simpson Tabernacle, the Cleveland Plain-Dealer has this to say:

"The latest musical prodigy is Gerome Helmont, a phenomenal violinist of 13. He is a native of Detroit and was discovered by a wealthy man there, who put his money to excellent use by sending young Helmont to New York, where he studied under Ovid Musin. He is already a fine artist, and if he fulfills his present promise, he will be one of the great violinists of the day. Thanksgiving evening he played before the Excelsior Club and set its members wild with his marvelous execution and his still more wonderful expression."

velous execution and his still more wonderful expression."

Again, the Detroit Journal says of the opening concert in that city: "Gerome Helmont stood on the concert platform at the Auditorium last night, his head barely reaching the top of the music rack beside him, and handled the violin as easily and confidently as did his master, Musin. Helmont has established a place for himself that is unique. His achievements are not those of that unhealthful product, the prodigy, nor does the epithet "child-wonder" give him his just rank among musicians. He is distinctly a violinist whose dignity and assurance are substantiated fully by the excellence of his playing. In fineness of finish and elegance of detail the iad's work is remarkable, but more astonishing is the maturity of his interpretation and musical feeling. His opening number was "Concerto No. 7." De Beriot, followed by 'Evening Star.' "Tannheuser' (Wagner,) a Musin composition dedicated to Helmont; "Elentanz' (Popper-Sauret,) and numerous encores which the audience demanded. An exquisite cradle song composed by Musin, was one of the most pleasing numbers."

With young Helmont is Miss Grace Preston, a contralto of some note, and Miss Ida Simmons, accompaniste and piano soloist. Of the young singer, the papers speak in high praise. This is from the Detroit Journal: "Miss Grace Preston sang the familiar aria for contralto, 'Amour Viens Alder,' from 'Sazson and Delliah.' Her voice was full in the low registers, in which it descended to a remarkable depth. It was clear and pleasing in the upper tones. She was recalled with enthusiasm after each number. Particularly effective was an encore number, 'Because I Love You,' and 'Oh, That We Two Were Maying' (Nevin.") That We Two Were Maying' (Nevin.")

Few artists have ever come to this country for the first time, says the New York Musical Age, who have gained so great a prestige here through the reports of their work abroad as Emil Sauer. The critics of the chief cities of Europe seem to unite in applauding him and the surpassing brilliancy of his art. It is in the interpretation of the works of Beethoven and of Bach that this planist chiefly excels, and from this statement some idea may be gained of his intellectual grasp as well as the character of his temperament. His face suggests poetry and delicacy of sentiment, while his broad, high brow shows the mental power of the artist—the true artist. It suggests Rubinstein's earlier pictures, although the lower part of the face has more of the dreamer in its expression. Sauer opened in New York January 10, and next month he starts for a tournee of the continent, including the Pacific Coast.

Miss Carrie Conger will give an invitation pupils' piano recital at Fitzgerald Music Hall sometime during the last week of this month.

Thursday evening, Jan. 19, Miss Eliabeth Carrick will give a song recital at Fitzgerald Hall, assisted by Miss Miriam Barnes, piano, and Paul Jennison, 'cello. Miss. Blanche Rogers will act as accompanist. Miss Carrick is a sister of Mrs. Thilo Becker and this is her initial appearance in public since her arrival from Scotiand several months ago. Miss Barnes' brilliant work is so well known that she needs no introduction. Paul Jennison, a brother of the soloist at the last symphony concert, was here several years ago, when he was 'cellist with the Mendelssohn Quintette. He is recently from the East and this will be his first appearance here since his return. The programme is artistic in makeup and the evening promises to be of unusual importance and interest musically. Here are the numbers that will be sung and played:

Miss Alice Beach McComas, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. C. C. McComas, and a pianist of much promise, has returned from an extended course of study in the North. Of her present accomplishment H. M. Bosworth in the San Francisco Examiner, says:

"Miss McComas evinces strong poetical conception, and captures the sympathies of her hearers with that indescribable magnetism which distinguishes the orator from the talker. She plays with the heart rather than describable magnetism which distinguishes the orator from the talker. She plays with the heart rather than with the fingers. Brains predominate over merely technical considerations. Accordingly she is at her best in the plano poems of Chopin rather than in the herculean rhapsodies of Liszt. Her interpretation is intelligent and has the aplomb of deliberation. Her technique, though secondary, is extremely pleasing, being gent and has the aplomb of deliberation. Her technique, though secondary, is extremely pleasing, being particularly smooth and her touch velvety. She makes the piano sing as though it were her own voice. If she continues as she has begun—with her present equipment of talent and taste—she will become a very fine artist."

San Francisco Town Talk says: "Hers is a fine technique, marked by a fluency and polish found only with the true, artistic feeling so evident in all Miss McComas' work. She played the Schumann sonata (op, 22) with a deeper, more mature interpretation than such youthful players usually give to music . . . .

Miss McComas is a conscientious student and her play-ing evinces a serious underlying purpose which carries true meaning and leaves a lasting impression upon her hearers, who become at once her friends."

S. W. Jennison, the violinist, whose scholarly and artistic playing contributed so much to the pleasure of the last symphony concert, has associated himself with F. A. Bacon at the Studio, 109½ South Broadway, where he will receive pupils Tuesdays and Fridays.

MUSICAL MELANGE.

Though the Bayreuth performances of 1899 are still over six months off, the sale of tickets throughout Europe has reached such proportions as to insure that the coming festival will eclipse all others, at least in point of popular success, says the Criterion. Four thousand $5 tickets have already been sold in England alone, and on the continent there has been an equal demand for them. The directors calculate that between one-third and a half of the available seats have already been disposed of, though it is not unlikely that speculators may in a measure be responsible for this large early booking. The performances will last from July 22 to August 20. Two cycles of the "Ring" are to be given with five performances of "Die Meistersinger" and seven of "Parsifal."

[Musical Courier:] The alleged charity concert ought to be abolished. It is a nuisance, a menace. It is always absurd from an artistic standpoint, and is a drain on the purse and good nature of the audience. There never was a charity concert at which the audience got the worth of its money. Besides, it artists give their services free or at greatly reduced rates, the harm done is great. It cheapens them for all times. The charity concert, the benefit concert, the concert given by incompetent amateurs and free concerts should be banished forever.

[New York Tribune:] At its annual meeting last week the Council of the American Folk-Lore Society appointed Dr. Franz Boas, Prof. Charles L. Edwards (the new president.) Miss Alice C. Fletcher and H. E. Krehbiel a committee on American folk-song, the purpose being to extend the work of the society into the field for which it has been proposed to organize an American Folk-Song Society. If such a folk-song society is organized its first work will be to raise money enough to put a collector in the field, to make a systematic effort to bring together in preservable shape characteristic specimens of true folk-song that have grown up in America. Such specimens would be more likely to have value in their relationship to the musical art than to any branch of ethnological study, while the reverse of this is true of Indian song, to which the Folk-Lore Society is devoting considerable attention.

Josef Hofmann does not believe in excessive practicing at the piano, says the Musical Age. While studying under Rubinstein he practiced three hours daily, and this he considers sufficient. Most students, he says, make the mistake of over-practicing, which "makes one's mind grow stupid and confused, and, naturally, one's fingers follow the brain." He believes, too, that students use too much force in practicing. It is the fingers that need constant practice, and one should play only hard enough to keep them and the wrists from becoming stiff. When on his last tour of the United States, Josef Hofmann did not take with him a single piece of music for his own use, but depended wholly on his remarkable memory. He makes little preparation for the concerts at which he performs. Sometimes he plays exercises for half an hour a day to "take the stiffness out of his fingers," but more often he does nothing but glance through the orchestral score just before the concert. This is probably a suitable plan for Hofmann, but the amateur would better beware of it.

This is probably a suitable plan for Hofmann, but the amateur would better beware of it.

Giordano's latest opera, "Fedora," was produced a fortnight ago in Milan. A correspondent writes of it: "Giordano's music lacks none of the qualities that distinguish that of 'Andrea Chenier.' 'Fedora' moves with the same breathless, feverish haste, with the same absorption on Giordano's part in the dramatic exigencies of the text and the dramatic purport of the music, with the same theatrical instinct, the same effort to characterize the personages by tones, the same desire to make every bar strike home. Giordano's melodic intervention is as fertile, vigorous and individual as it was in 'Andrea Chenier,' but he is even less willing to develop and elaborate his melodies unless he is quite sure, as in the story of the murder of Vladimir, that the dramatic exigencies of the moment demand it. The short arioso, the hall mark of the young Italians, is usually too long for him. His reliance rather is on the polgnant phrases, so polgnant that the listener forgets all else until another equaly polgnant displaces it. The feverish dialogue in parts of the first and of the third acts mirrors the situation and the feelings of the personages, but it is rather excited speech charged with the greater emotional force by the phrases that accompany it, than music in any ordered or synthetic sense. It moves keenly; it accomplishes its purpose; it shows remarkable and almost unerring dramatic instinct in the composer and his abundant mastery of his resources; but after all it is only telegraphic music, so to say, very highly charged with the electricity of emotions. Giordano cannot stop if he would. His dramatic heat drives him forward as he would drive his listeners.

The latest fad in musical Italy is the oratorio. London Daily News gives these particulars regarding the two musical lions of the day:

"The oratories of the young Abbé Lorenzo Perosi are now being performed in all the chief Italian towns, and his 'La Resurrezione di Lazzaro' has been given at the Communale at Bologna to £400 houses. His fame is, however, only a few months old. His first oratorio, 'The Passion of Christ,' was produced at Milan in the spring, and was at once published by Ricordi. His second oratorio, 'The Transfiguration,' was produced at the exhibition building at Venice in April, and afterward at the Teatro Fenice, with Kaschmann in the haritone part of the Savior, while 'Lazarus' has only recently been finished. Perosi is a youth of 25, is a Piedmontese, and the son of a village organist. The generosity of a wealthy Italian family enabled him to travel, and eventually he became organist at San Marco, Venice. Two years ago he was ordained priest.

"Another Italian oratorio which has excited considerhe oratories of the young Abb able interest is the 'St. John the Baptise' of Lorenzo Parodi. It is in four parts, entitled 'Nativity,' John in the Desert,' 'Baptism of Christ,' and 'Martyrdom,' and it was produced in the presence of the archbishop at the centenary fetes at Genoa. The desert scene is said to be based exclusively upon ancient Arab themes, while the dance music before Herod is also oriental.

"Yet another oratorio, 'The Nativity,' is composed by an anonymous priest for four-part chorus, organ, or orchestra, and is based exclusively upon old French Noels."

Jean de Reszke has given out his plan for reviving the glories of the Theater des Italians in Paris. He says:

"Musicians and opera lovers in Paris have long desired me to undertake just such a venture, and now we are forming a stock company, which we propose capitalizing at f.5,000,000, and the shares will be f.500 each. Judging from the interest expressed in the project before I left Paris, we shall have no difficulty in placing our stock. The site of the proposed operahouse is in the Place Vendome, than which no better exists. We have had our eye on the present Ministry of Justice and an adjoining building, next door to the Hotel Bristol. The property will be sold at auction next month, and our representatives will be among the bidders. It is for this reason that I regret the publicity which our plan has gained, for, knowing we want the property, the owners will naturally run the price up to a figure considerably beyond that which would have been reached had we been permitted to remain incognito, as it were. We shall not alter the facade of the buildings—the city will not permit us to. But we shall demolish the interior and entirely rebuild it. The stage will be a model, and the auditorium and galleries will follow somewhat the lines of the Metropolitan Operahouse. On the top floor I shall have a conservatoire, elaborately fitted up, where it is my plan to instruct a few, just a few, pupils in singing. I shall select my pupils with great discrimination, for my teaching will be but a detail of the scheme. Ah, there are so many good American voices—lovely voices—voices that should be cultivated! In a fortnight or so our prospectuses and subscription blanks will reach this country. We are going to invite American investment—in fact, two banks in Paris are striving to secure the American agency. As soon as that detail is settled the stock will be placed on sale. The theater will be known as the De Reszke Operahouse, and my brother and I will, of course, appear frequently. We hope to have matters in shape to give our first performance about June 15, 1900."

CYRANO AND WHETSTONE,

DESPERATE EFFORT TO DISCOVER A SIMILARITY BETWEEN TWO PLAYS.

All Chicago is agog just how over the extraordinary claim of Samuel Eberly Gross, a wealthy business man of that city, who has brought suit against Richard Mansfield, charging that "Cyrano de Bergerac" is an infringement upon "The Merchant-Prince of Cornville," a play alleged to have been written by Mr. Gross twenty years ago and shimitted to A. M. by Mr. Gross twenty years ago and submitted to A. M. Palmer. It is claimed that there is great similarity between the two plays; that the plots are practically identical, and that the lines in "Cyrano" are almost a direct plagiarism of the earlier play. The Chicago Inter-Ocean has taken the trouble to compare the plots with this result:

In each play the heroine is under the influence of a guardian or patron.

In each the guardian or patron wishes the heroine to marry a man who is distasteful to her.

In each the wishes of the patron are disregarded by the heroine.

In each the heroine is in love with a person other thirty-six points here given constitute practically the plots of both plays.

While a great many of these identical phases in the two plots are nothing more than the weather-beaten stage material which has been used ever since there was a stage the coincidence is still rather unusual. The similarity, however, applies only to the framework of the two pleces, the spirit is totally different, as is abundantly demonstrated by the extracts which are paralleled. In many instances the effort to prove a resemblance is strained to the point of absurdity. For example, to quote from the long string of excerpts from the text:

semblance is strained to the point of absurdity. For example, to quote from the long string of excerpts from the text:

"Cyrano says: '. . he has saved his soldier's plume." (Cyrano, page 241, line 24.)

"Bluegrass asks if he shall 'order the nuptial plumage.' (Merchant, page 166, line 2.)

"Both had lost that which was most dear to them—the gaining of the heroine."

And again:

"Cyrano to Roxane on balcony, Yes, 'tis a sheer delight; we guess at one another in the dark. You see the blackness of my tralling cloak, I see the whiteness of a summer robe. And I am but a shadow, you a radiance. (Cyrano, page 136, lines 20 to 24.)

"Ideal to Violet in glen of ferns. Come, let us walk within this pleasant glen; and if we weary—on mossy bank, in the cool shade of interlacing leaves, we'll watch the gentle coquetry between the burning sunbeam and a shaded fern. (Merchant, page 136, lines 4 to 8.")

A. M. Palmer, when asked about the suit, said the charge was absurdly ridiculous; that Mr. Mansfield presented "Cyrano" as it was presented in Paris and all the European capitals without interpolation of any kind; that the play had run through a hundred editions in Paris alone, over 100.000 copies having been printed there, besides many thousand copies in English in this country, as well as abroad; that personally he had not read "The Merchant Prince of Cornville," having been only sufficiently curious to run over the first act; that Mr. Gross, if he believed his thoughts had been stolen, should bring suit against M. Rostand, the French playwright, and not Mr. Mansfield, who was simply presenting in this country and honestly paying a royalty for a play that has held the boards for nearly a year and has become as famous as the best work of the masters of the past, saying that "Cyrano" today occupied a place in the literary and dramatic world, and, incidentally, "Cyrano" is floating serenely upon the crest of another tidal wave of advertising.

The second statement of the se THE CARE OF THE HUMAN BODY.

1TH this number of The Times commences department devoted to hygiene, which will be published every Sunday in the magazine sec-

The subject is a most important one, and one in which the general public is becoming constantly more ested. There has been a vast improvement in this direction during the past twenty years, and this is largely due to the intelligent interest displayed by the press in regard to sanitary matters.

During the past two thousand years surgery has made most remarkable advances, so that nowadays some of the operations performed are little short of miraculous. Patients who would have been given up to certain death, even as recently as a quarter of a century ago, now have a good chance of recovery, under the proper care of skilled surgeons. On the other hand therapeutics, or the administration of remedies in disease, has made little or no advance since the time when Pythagoras declared "Natura sanet non medicus"—Nature cures, not the physician. Fashions come and go in medicines, as in bonnets or bustles, and the remedy that is considered almost infallible today is littly to be diseased. almost infallible today is likely to be discarded and de-rided a few years hence. It is true, however, that while the young fledgling physician, fresh from college, usually has a remedy in a bottle for every known disease to which human flesh is heir, the tendency is constantly growing, on part of older, more experienced and conscientious doctors, to rely more upon the healing power of nature, aided by diet and exercise, than upon drugs, whose effect upon the human system is at best problematical.

There is an old English saying that "every man is a fool or a physician at 40." While this may not be strictly accurate, yet it is a fact that every man who has reached middle age should have at least as good an idea of his constitution, its needs and shortcomings, as the first medical practitioner who may be called in to examine him. It is not too much to expect that the average intelligent human being, in these-closing days of the nineteenth century, should be at least as well informed upon the construction of the body which his soul inhabits, and of the fundamental laws of health which regulate the functions of the body, as he is in regard to the geography of Central Africa, or the outlines of astronomy.

In this department to experiment which regulate the functions of the body, as he is in regard to the geography of Central Africa, or the outlines of astronomy.

In this department no encouragement will be held out to cranks or extremists. The good in hygiene is not all found in any one school. On the other hand, there is some good in almost every hygienic theory that is advanced, from sun baths to Christian Science. Unfortunately, every well-meaning enthusiast who happens to hit upon some sanitary idea, which has been lost sight of and disregarded for centuries, is apt to imagine that he has found the philosopher's stone, in the shape of a cure-all, whereas he has merely brought to the surface another of the stones which belong to the fortress of health and long life, nor will those who seek, for mercenary purposes, to prey upon the sufferings of unfortunate humanity, find any comfort in this department.

Brief communications of a practical character, bearing upon the subject of hygiene, will be welcome, but any who may attempt to advertise specific remedies in these columns will save themselves time and trouble by withholding their communications.

T IS announced that, owing to the appearance in Los Angeles of a few mild cases of smallpox, the Board of Education has decided to order the compulsory vaccination of all the public-school children. This decision will, undoubtedly, meet with much criticism and op-position. There are hundreds of parents in Los Ange-les, who will rather take their children from school than position. There are hundreds of parents in Los Angeles, who will rather take their children from school than permit them to submit to an operation which they believe to be both useless and dangerous. In England there has been for thirty years or more a bitter fight waged against the practice of vaccination, where, for some years, it has been compulsory. Hundreds of parents have paid fines, or gone to jall, scores of times, rather than have their children vaccinated. Several years ago a parliamentary commission was appointed to investigate the subject, the report of which was, on the whole, unfavorable. Since then it has been announced in the dispatches during the past few weeks that the government has surrendered to the strong adverse pressure on part of the public, so that now it is permitted to those who do not believe in vaccination to make a slipple affirmation that they have conscientious scruples against the practice, in which case it is not enforced. This is a great victory for the opponents of vaccination. The local medical authorities assert positively that Gree is absolutely no danger of an epidemic of small flow in Los Angeles at present. If this is so, then why should all the school children be vaccinated? Surely not for the sake of the few thousand dollars that the operation will place in the pockets of physicians.

While the present system of vaccination from the calfis by no means so dangerous as the old arm-to-arm practice, which was prolific of evils, yet, there is no doubt.

While the present system of vaccination from the calfis by no means so dangerous as the old arm-to-arm practice, which was prolific of evils, yet, there is no doubt, that disease sometimes follows the operation of vaccination even now, where the lymph is not pure. To speak of "pure lymph," by the way, is about equivalent to speaking of "pure filth." Where a big order for about 12,000 points of vaccine virus has to be filled on a "rush order," as would be necessary in this case, it is scarcely to be supposed that exceptional care can be taken to provide that the material is just as it should be.

As to the protective power of vaccination against

As to the protective power of vaccination against smallpox, physicians no longer make such great claims as they did formerly. When the practice was first introduced by Dr. Jenner, it was claimed that the party vaccinated was protected for life against smallpox. Afterward, this theory proved to be erroneous, and it was then said to be necessary to revaccinate every seven years. Nowadays, it is fashionable to advise vaccination whenever a smallpox scare comes around.

Fifty years ago, if a physician was called to a man who had a fever, and the man died without the physician having bled him, his medical attendant could be arrested for manslaughter. Who thinks of bleeding now-adays? Is it not quite possible that twenty years hence vaccination for smallpox will be as obsolete a practice as bleeding is today?

If vaccination is good as a protection against smallpox as bleeding is today?

If vaccination is good as a protection against smallpox a similar practice should be good for other diseases. Several suggestions of this kind have been made. It has even been proposed to inoculate against syphilis. When inoculation against most diseases is made compulsory in our schools, the doctors will be kept busy, but will the parents stand it? Certainly, there must be a limit to such interference with the liberty of the subject, in connection with every new medical fad that comes to the surface.

There is one more point to be noted in this connection.

There is one more point to be noted in this connection. If, as the advocates of vaccination claim, it is a sure protection against smallpox, then, so long as they and their families are vaccinated, they are fully protected, and what difference does it make to them whether others, who do not believe in the practice, are vaccinated or not?

The Times has received the following communication

The Times has received the following communication on this subject:

"Vaccination is a crime, and compulsory vaccination doubly so. The first is a crime against nature, the second against reason and the greatest principle of the Constitution, personal freedom and liberty. What does the smallpox scare and the resolution on this subject presented by Dr. Smith and adopted by the Board of Education mean? 1st, an appropriation of $50,000 to $100,000 (the least of all its evils) to the medical profession; 2nd, twenty-five to fifty thousand people inoculated with one of the vilest forms of poison, whether taken from the festering, putrid sores of man or beast. Vaccination is not a preventative for smallpox and no reputable or honest physician will claim it is. Neither does smallpox, itself, constitute immunity from further attacks. Knowing this, why take into the system a deadly poison which takes years to eliminate?

"Poison, like every force in nature, follows the path of least resistance. If there is a weak place in the system, the virus seeks it out and all sorts of disease which makes life a burden, follow as a result.

"Consumption follows in the footsteps of vaccination, as directly as an effect ever follows a cause."

"Below are quotations from a student on this subject and a physician, well known throughout this land:

"Several years ago, compulsory vaccination was submitted to the voting population of Switzerland by the referendum and every canton but one gave a majority against it."

against it.'
"Jenner, the originator of this curse to humanity, says: 'I wish my professional brethren to be slow to publish fatal cases of smallpox, after vaccination.' (Why?)

"Louis the XV of France contracted the disease by inoculation at the age of 16 and died from a second attack at 64."

"Sir James Y. Simpson of Edinburgh, mentions the case of a woman who died from her eighth attack."

"In the census of 1870 there is a table which shows that there was more smallpox in England in 1860 than in 1850, and still more in 1870 than in 1860. Smallpox had become more prevalent since the spread of vaccination, and yet in each year, this disease was far less tatal than measles, scarlatina, or consumption."

"During the years 1863-4-5, when vaccination had become general and compulsory, smallpox prevalled to an unusual extent in England as well as in Germany, Hungary, France and Sweden. As an example of its scarcity there were 1346 persons in Upper Bavaria attacked by it in the malignant form, of whom 90 per cent. had been vaccinated."

"'Dr. George Gregory, who was himself physician of the smallpox hospital established in London to test and carry out the theories, absolutely refused to permit his own children to be vaccinated."

"Statistical tables from 1675 to 1761 show its yearly averages of deaths as follows: In London, 7 per cent.; in Edinburgh, 7.6 per cent.; in Paris, 7.2 per cent., and in Berlin, 8.1 per cent. After inoculation for smallpox was introduced the mortality increased to 10 per cent. Since vaccination was adopted it is 15 per cent."

"Mary the Magdalen may have been relieved of seven devils, but in the catagory of vaccination there is a legion of them introduced afresh."

"Parents, who are the guardians of the coming race, let me ask you to give this question serious consideration."

A Microbe-proof House.

HE following description of a novel dwelling was given in the Leeds Hospital Magazine: domicile on earth is that recently erected at Yokohama by an eminent German bacteriologist. It is a microbeproof house built of glass blocks. There are no window sashes and the doors when closed are air tight. The air supply is forced into the room through a pipe and is fitlered through cotton wool to cleanse it of bacteria.
To insure further sterilization the air is driven against a glycerin-coated plate of glass, which captured all the microbes the wool spares. The few microbes brought into the house in the clothes of visitors soon die in the warm sunlight with which the house is flooded. The space between the glass blocks, of which the house is built, is filled with a solution of salts, which absorbs the heat of the sun so that the rooms are much cooler than those protected by the thickest shades. In the evening the interior is heated by the salts, radiating the heat they have absorbed during the day." by an eminent German bacteriologist. It is a microbe-

Fruit a Natural Food, and natural foo It should be I more generally partaken of, especially in this section; where it is so plentiful and cheap. Coleman's 'Insects, animals, children hunger for it. The small "Insects, animals, children hunger for it. The small boy in early summer, in his impatience, will not wait for it to ripen, but will run the risk of colic pangs, not to mention maternal punishment, in his eagerness to obtain it. The food of the wise man is fruit in plenty, with milk, rice and eggs. The children of the city alleys, with their pallid faces and inert bodies, do not suffer from lack of fresh country air alone. They need fruit. They are suffering from inciplent scurvy, the remedy for which is fresh fruits. Take them into an old apple orchard in harvest time, give them the cittzenship of the trees and see how quickly the rosy cheeks of the apple will be transferred.

"Capt. Cook prided himself more on losing only one man during his long voyage of discovery than on the discoveries he had made; and he tells of the invaluable aid he had obtained in the use of lemons and oranges for preventing or curing scurvy. Lemon juice is of well-known use in the cure of rheumatism. There are in Germany many institutions where the fruit cure is employed with remarkable success in cases of rheumatism, anaemic and digestive troubles. Fruit is rather a necessary ally than an independent food. Its antiscorbutic action keeps the body healthy; and the sugar it contains is readily digestible. With meats that are fatty it has been associated from time immemorial—apple sauce with roast goose or pork and more recently cranberry sauce with turkey. The fatty properties of meat are, Addison says, 'corrected' by the fruit. Let no fruit grower be alarmed at the vast development that has recently been made in his industry. There is no fear that more fruit will be produced than people canconsume."

Vegetarian Diet.

HE Medical Record, a conservative old-line medical publication, has the following admission in regard the early dietetic habits of the human race:
"Primitive man originally subsisted on a diet consisting purely of fruits and roots; but though fructivorous by instinct and by reason of the conformation of his digestive organs and dental system, in which respect he is nearly allied to the apes, which are all fruit-eating animals in their natural state, he soon became omnivorous from necessity, and his stomach readily adapted itself to every kind of food. If the Darwinian theory be accepted and the descent of man from simian ancestors be granted, we have further argument in support of the fact that flesh-eating was the outcome of civilization and climatic necessity rather than of natural craving. Exposed at the epoch of the great extension of the glaciers, which at one time covered all our mountains, to the hardships of an inclement climate, man required something more than nourishing and heat supplying than the vegetable diet which sufficed for him in a higher temperature; and in the palaeolithic age we find him not only destroying animal life, but provided with and utilizing means of cooking the victims of his rough-hewn knife and spear." ous by instinct and by reason of the conformation of

Abdominal Band.

HE wearing of a fiannel belt around the abdomen has proved of great service in warding off disease among American troops with whom in the Philippines the wearing of it has been made compulsory. The New York Post says:

"Nothing is more efficient to prevent intestinal disor-"Nothing is more efficient to prevent intestinal disorders through the changing season than the wearing of abdominal bands. A physician says that he never lets a friend or patient go abroad without a supply of them in his trunk. Now that they are obtainable at most shops, there is no excuse for not adding them to the traveling or staying-at-home wardrobe. It is a regulation of the British army in India that every soldier shall wear a woolen band. The government supplies shall wear a woolen band. The government supplies the bands and consider it the best sort of investment, cases of cholera among the band wearers being almost unknown. At a department store where the bands are sold, the clerk asserts that the demand is steadily increasing, showing that the use of them in this country is being appreciated. A common complaint among tourists, particularly bleycling tourists in Europe, is what the French call fatigue de l'estomac, and for this allment, which is indigestion produced by over-exercise, nine out of ten continental physicians will recommend the bands." the bands.

The Value of Fresh Air.

RESH air is so common and cheap that few people realize how important a factor it is in restoring or maintaining health. The London Hospital says:

"The admitted advantage of an outdoor life in many "The admitted advantage of an outdoor life in many morbid conditions, and notably in consumption, seems to point to the conclusion that there is something definitely injurious in the indoor life which is now the common mode of existence among civilized people. It is a striking and startling thing that the mere removal of a patient into the open air should lower his fever, should remove his night sweats, and take away his hectic flush, and it is difficult to avoid the conclusion that if these symptoms are removed by the purity of the air outside, they must have been largely caused by the impurity of the air within the house. Nor have we any right to assume that it is the consumptive only who suffers. Doubtless the healthy struggle against and overcome evil influences before which those who are tuberculous succumb, but that is not to say that in the struggle we do not suffer, and, indeed, the facts recently brought forward are sufficient to show that the stuffy life of warmth and comfort which civilized man now 'enjoys' is bad for the health even of the healthest. We make our windows fit, we pad our doors, we shiver at a draught, we surround ourselves with woolen curtains, dusty carpets, and fuffy, luxuriant upholstery; we breathe the same air over and over again, and then we wonder that we are not strong and vigorous. The fact is we are daily using up the exuberant vitality with which nature has provided us in struggling against artificial conditions. How powerful for evil, how deteriorating these conditions are, is shown by the fact that their mere removal gives back to the consumptive that vitality with each last him to conscend the consumptive that vitality with each last him to conscend the consumptive that vitality with each last him to conscend the consumptive that vitality with each last him to conscend the consumptive that vitality with each last him to conscend the consumptive that vitality with each last him to consumptive that vitality with each last him to consumptive that the consumptive that the co morbid conditions, and notably in consumption, seems ating these conditions are, is shown by the fact that their mere removal gives back to the consumptive that vitality which enables him to overcome the seeds of disease within him. Fresh air is not a thing to be taken in little doses once a day, but a thing to live on."

THE GREAT DEMOCRACY.

A lady of Somerset bewailed the loss of a somewhat ill-bred but extremely wealthy neighbor, who had been very liberal in his help to her country charities. "Mr. X. is dead," said she. "He was so good, and kind, and helpful to me in all sorts of ways. He was so vulgar, poor, dear fellow, we could not know him in London; but we shall meet in Heaven."

Stopped Asking Questions.

ND if I were you, I would never ask him where he has been if he should come home very, very late. I had an experience in that line with his father many years ago, and I learned then that if I was to have any respect for him I must never ask him any question, and especially when

This was the admonition of a mother-in-law to the new wife of her son. The new wife concluded to make use of it early in the house, and told it to her husband. The latter caught his father at the club in Brooklyn and told it as his mother had told it:

"William came in quite late, or early, as you prefer. I had not slept a wink. I had worn out my slippers walking, wandering, waiting and thinking only as a woman can and will. Of course it was a comforting relief when he did come, and I had made up my mind that I would not upbraid him. Never do that unless you are very sure. If you can corner a man, all right; but if he thinks you only suspect, he expands in importance. So when William came up that morning, for it was after 2 o'clock, dear, I met him kindly and took off his hat and wrap. But somehow while I was giving him the little attentions which a man likes, and which I trust you will always give to man likes, and which I trust you will always give to my boy, I could not restrain a little curiosity, and without intending a clap-perclaw, or to seem hypocritical, I just asked in a young wife's solicitous way: William, where have you been?' You know if he had railed at me, or snapped me up, as I have heard of men doing at such times, I think I should have taken my portion and said nothing. But he said in his quiet way, which I have always noticed in him:

"'Mary, you wouldn't believe me if I told you.'
"Of course, dear, you will know and understand later in your life how an appeal of that sort will put mag-nifying lenses upon a woman's curiosity. When he said that, I put my arms around his neck and replied as honestly as any woman ever did in her life: 'Yes, I will, William. If you will only tell me where you have will, William. If you will only tell me where you have been, I wil believe every word you say.'

"He sat down and lighted a cigar as deliberately as a man can, and at that hour, too, and then shook his head and said: 'No, Mary, I know you would not believe it. If I thought you would, I had as lief as not, but you are so suspicious, so full of curiosity—,'

"I fell upon my knees, but it was the only time I ever did, and I said to him—oh, how earnestly: 'William, I will believe you; only trust me to do so; tell me where you have been, and I promise you I will believe every word you utter.'

"Then he placed one hand on my head, and he looked

"Then he placed one hand on my head, and he looked into my face and said: 'Mary, I have been lecturing to the Young Men's Christian Association.'

"From that morning until the present. dear, I have gone on with a mental grubbing hoe, and whenever an interrogation point has showed itself I have hit it. It is the upas plant in the garden of domesticity."—[New York Sun.

The Physiology Class.

THERE is a lady occupied in the instruction of the A juvenile mind who is quite willing to confess that the pupils who attend her classes do not do all the learning. Some of the small folk under her tuition occasionally astonish her with their superior knowledge of the modernly-developed resources of the English language. A lecture on hygiene had been included in the programme for the day, and she had taken care to show the effects of alcohol and tobacco upon the system. She impressed her teachings by means of anatomical charts, which gave especial lucidity to her remarks when she came to warning the little girls, years in advance of any practical need, of the dangers of tight lacing. One of the little girls, whose home surroundings are of the sort in which ease, rather than elegance of expression is sought, listened with profound attention. "Now, Margaret," the teacher said, "you may see how well you remember what I have said about tight lacing, and tell us, why it is injurious."

There was no response.

"I mean you, Maggle," the teacher added, and the girl jumped to her feet as she recognized the more familiar name. casionally astonish her with their superior knowledge

Anticipated the Empress,

THE salient point to note in the following story, now creating much amusement in the Old World, is the striking resemblance Germany's Kaiser bears to less illustrious husbands in his quickness to explain, excuse and make amends for a shortcoming before his wife has a chance to question him about it.

Not long before he started on his journey to the Holy Land, he paid an unexpected morning visit to the Austrian Ambassador, Herr von Szogyeny-Marich, and, after seating himself comfortably in an arm chair, His Majesty said:

"Come and have a chat."
The conversation which followed was most entertaining, and when the Emperor thought of the time, he suddenly jumped up, and looked at his watch, and exclaimed:

"I didn't know it was so late. Have you a telephone.
I must say good-by to the Empress, as I have only just time to catch the train for the maneuvers."
The Ambassador offered to do the telephoning, but the Emperor insisted upon doing the ringing and the helloing himself. Then, speaking to the Empress, he said: "Don't be angry, dear. I chatted too long with Szogyeny, and must drive direct to the station, so I cannot give you my parting kiss, for which I am sorry. Goodby, dear."—[Youth's Companion.

Charmed the Snake.

A N ENGLISH woman residing in India one evening found to her horror that a huge cobra had coiled itself around her veranda rail, near which she sat playing the violin. She was too near the snake to run with ing the violin. She was too near the snake to run with safety, so she continued playing while she gradually edged away. At first her only idea was to keep the creature thus engaged while she escaped, but when she had gained a safer distance, perhaps fascinated by the unwonted sight, a strange inspiration seized her. She played air after air and of different characters. The effect was magical. That snake behaved like an ardent, hot-blooded disciple of Paganini. Every variation in the music, whether of volume or of tone, produced a corresponding change in the attitude of the cobra. If she played a lively dance it swayed its body sidewise in quick time, and yet in graceful curves. Once she struck a number of false notes in rapid succession—on purpose. The cobra winced and writhed in pain as if suddenly struck with a whip. Thus, the creature behaved like a mad musician, till the lady, getting tired of the sport, gradually worked herself farther and farther, and then made a sudden bott into her room and banged the door, leaving the cobra to wander disconsidered. banged the door, leaving the cobra to wander disc solate to its lair in the fields.—Pittsburgh Dispatch.

Bishop Watterson's Joke.

BISHOP WATTERSON of Nebraska was once mistaken for a traveling salesman by a commercial traveler who met him in a railway train.

"Do you represent a big house?" asked the traveler of the bishop.

"Biggest on earth," replied the bishop.
"What's the name of the firm?"
"Lord and Church."
"Hum! 'Lord and Church.' Never heard of it. Got branch houses anywhere?"
"Branch houses all over the world."
"That's queer. Never heard of 'em. Is it boots and shoes?"

"Oh, dry goods, I suppose?"
"Yes, they call my sermons that, sometimes."—[Christian Endeavor World.

A Dinner That Suited.

HE New York Evening Post tells this story of Leo Delibes, the popular French ballet composer: One day he met the late Charles Monselet, who was on his way to a restaurant where, once a fortnight, a well-known champagne merchant gave a dinner to prominent authorized journalists. These dinners were prepared by one of the most noted cooks, and the choicest wines were served. Delibes on this occasion invited his friend to dine with him, but Monselet said he was already invited to meet some friends, and, inspired by a sudden mischievous thought, he said, "Come along—it's a table d'hote at f.6 ($1.20) a cover; we all pay our own bills."

own bills."

Delibes accepted, and when the viands and fine wines were brought on, one course after another, his eyes opened wider and wider. Monselet had informed his friends of the joke, and at the end the waiter passed around a tray, on which each diner deposited f.6. Delibes, who had muttered to himself repeatedly, 'Six francs!" added half a franc as fee to his little pile of silver, and afterward he called the waiter aside and informed him sotto voce that he would take a month's meal tickets for that table d'hote.

Had Had No Experience.

HE rule that no person shall smoke in a street car is enforced strictly by the conductors on all Memphis lines, but an exception is made in the case of one passenger, namely, the Hon. John L. T. Sneed. It is not recorded that the able Chancellor ever took advantage of the exceptional privilege accorded him, but it is certain that he has been invited to go in off the platform and finish his cigar comfortably on a cushioned

"No, I'm afraid the ladies would object," was his response to such an invitation.
"The ladies all make concessions to you," was the reply of the conductor. "I don't know about that," said the Judge. "You heard what the old lady said about smoking in her presence?"

The conductor had to confess that, though he had heard a good many stories on the rear platform, he had never heard this particular one.

"Well, I'll tell you," said the Chancellor. "She was a charming old lady of the old school, and one day she was asked if she objected to a gentleman smoking in her presence. 'I don't really know,' was her reply. 'I have never had any experience in that line. No gentleman has ever smoked in my presence.'"—[Memphis Scimitar.

Knew His Business.

THERE was quite a little sensation at the postoffice A yesterday afternoon. It was created by a most out-of-the-ordinary letter carrier. Instead of the regulation cadet gray, he wore a suit of hair, spotted brown and white. He entered the postoffice at shortly after 2:30. He carried several letters in his mouth. Paying no attention to anybody, he trotted over to the window which the outgoing mail is received, stood upon his hind legs, with his fore paws on the partition, and coughed. The letters fluttered in through the window and the strange letter carrier paddled off as nonchalantly as though hundreds of people were not staring at him

The silent letter carrier was a dog. He wasn't a big dog. Nor was he a particularly handsome dog. But it was evident he was good. Where he came from or where he was going to, he didn't see fit to say.—[Kansas City Times.

They decided that what Daniel had done must be correct, so the pair threw themselves on their faces on the floor at her astonished Majesty's feet, and cried out with a loud voice:

"O Queen, live forever!"

However, this proved an excellent introduction, and presently the Queen and they became great friends. She took one of them on her knee, and all three chatted together in the friendliest way.

Water Supply of Santa Barbara.

HE question of the water supply for the city of Santa Barbara has been a perplexing one for many years. The city originally received its supply from the Mission Creek, north and west of the city, but this was found inadequate several years ago. Seven years ago wells were dug within the city limits, and a good flow of water was secured, but it was impure and new experiment has been tried. The city has been at a large expense boring a tunnel into the side of the mountain about six miles from Santa Barbara, at an elevation of about one thousand feet. The tunnel is now over twenty-one hundred feet into the mountain, and twenty-two inches of water has been running from it for some time past. This tunnel was all worked by hand, but at this depth the work is so difficult, and it be-ing almost impossible to work in the tunnel without air being pumped in, the city has gone to the expense of putting up an electric drill, which will serve as an easy method of drilling the tunnel to a much greater distanct, and also will operate an exhauster to draw the smoke out of the tunnel at each blast, and supply the tunnel with fresh air from the exhaust air.

and also will operate an exhauster to draw the smoke out of the tunnel at each blast, and supply the tunnel with fresh air from the exhaust air.

Recently Councilmen Hunt and Smith were witnesses to the first operation of the new drill. It was very successful, and met with their full approval. The electric drill used is one common in mining operations, but probably in no other place is it being used for drilling a tunnel for water where the power is supplied directly by the tunnel itself. It saves much time, labor and expense. The 2100 feet already bored cost the city over $11 a foot, while the last few feet ran up as high as $18 a foot, besides which the work was very slow. With the new drill the remaining 1000 or 1500 feet will be done at about $8 a foot, and will be completed in a very short time, comparatively.

The power plant is situated 500 feet vertically below the mouth of the tunnel, and this gives a pressure on the water-wheel of 217 pounds per square inch, which will develop a horse power to the inch of water supplied. The water is brought direct from the tunnel, a distance of 6000 feet, to the power plant, in a 7-inch wrougat-iron pipe. It is directed to the wheel through a five-eighths of an inch nozzle, which gives the water-wheel the speed of 1300 revolutions per minute. A cut-off hood is attached to a Repiogle governor, making the wheel entirely in its faction. The power is transmitted to the motor at the tunnel by No. 2 copper wire, where it runs an Ingersoll-Sergeant air-compressor, running at a speed of 150 revolutions a minute, and has a capacity of 69 cubic feet per minute. The air is pumped into a 6-foot receiver, with a working pressure of 110 pounds. From the tank the air is conducted to the drill through a 3-inch pipe extending into the tunnel a distance of over 2100 feet. From the end of this pipe the air is fed directly to the drill will deliver 350 blows a minute, and will strike 360 pounds at each blow.

Directly below the city water tunnel James Barker has a water tunnel which is Hiram Pierce also stack a fine flow of water in his tunnel in San Roque Cañon, a short time ago. It is estimated that he has a steady flow of twenty inches. He will immediately erect an irrigation plant and sell the water for irrigation purposes to the surrounding farmers. Water is valued at $1000 an inch in that

Colorado Desert Salt.

D ERHAPS in no portion of Southern California is there awaiting the energy and industry of civiliza-tion greater possibilities for the future than may be found in the southwestern portion of Riverside county. Surrounded by mountains, located in a valley county. Surrounded by mountains, located in a valley which stretches to the Arizona line on the south, is located the inland lake of Salton, which represents a vast body of salt from eight to fifteen miles long. The quality is equal to that of the finest Liverpool salt shipped across the Atlantic. This vast deposit is renewed from below the surface twelve times each year, or in other words, the surface is restored to the same condition and the same level after a period of four weeks, where the salt has been removed and taken to the factory for shipment. It is estimated by the Salton people that they could furnish a trainload of salt of thirty cars each day for 365 days in the year, did the market justify, and could a railroad freight be obtained that would stimulate the industry. At present they have a building over six hundred feet long, located near the deposit, with railroad and rolling stock of their own, which operates between the Southern Pacific Railroad and the deposit. They are now shipping both north and south to various points along the Coast and throughout the interior.

Here is an industry that should be fostered and considered containts.

Here is an industry that should be fostered and nourished. Certainly nature has placed here at the hand of man in all this desperate isolation of the Colorado Desert a vast field of riches. Not another bag of Liverpool salt should be needed on the Pacific Coast.

This great deposit is located near the main line of the Southern Pacific Railroad, which connects El Paso with Los Angeles. It is about 262 feet below sea level, and but for the mountains between the lake and sea, would be subject to inundation. Inland the Colorado River, in exceptional seasons, has been known to over-flow this deposit to a depth of five feet, which has proved beneficial, as it cools the atmosphere in sum-ner and freshens up the entire deposit. The salt gathers on the surface to an average depth of two feet, is cut in blocks with mattocks, and loaded on cars, then taken to the factory, where it is ground and sacked ready for shippers. ready for shipment.

Santa Barbara Oil

HE great oil territory situated about seven miles

THE great oil territory situated about seven miles south of Santa Barbara and running along the coast for a distance of several miles, is causing considerable excitement among the people interested. Every day a new oil well is being struck in this field, either at Miramar, Summerland, Carpinteria or El Rincon.

The Alaska Steam Whaling Company, with millions of dolfars of capital back of them, are now attempting to tap the head of the great oil basin. Their new field of operation is situated eight miles back of Carpinteria, on the side of the mountains many hundred feet above the sea level. They have gone to great expense in their endeavors to strike oil. J. M. Kelerman, a contractor of Los Angeles, has just completed boring an oil well for them to the depth of 2000 feet. His contract read for $10 a foot, and it Js raid that he made $5000 clear on the venture. He will begin immediately on several new wells for the same company.

Their property is situated in the midst of flowing oil springs, and upon the strength of these surface indications this company has already laid out a small fortune. Eight miles of heavy mountain grading has been done in the construction of wagon roads leading from the Carpinteria Valley to this oil field. Five hundred tons of piping are now lying at Carpinteria, to be used for conducting the oil down the mountain side to the beach for refining. A force of fifteen men is kept at work night and day at present, and in a short time this force will be doubled. All the supplies for this development work are purchased in Los Angeles. This company has its general office in San Francisco, and this oil-development business is merely a side issue, most of its business being transacted on the Alaskan Coast.

Postoffice Figures.

HE report of business at the Los Angeles postoffice shows a great gain, indicating that the population of the city has grown about eight thousand in the past year. During the fourth quarter of last year the business of the office amounted to $58,626.05, against $56,785.27 the corresponding quarter of 1897. The year's business showed a gain from $200,941.03 to $216,604.02, or a gain of $15,662.99. This is an increase of 3.24 per cent. for the quarter and 7.79 for the year.

HE Ananeim Plain Dealer, of December $1, contained the following in regard to a strike of natural gas made recently in Orange county:

"The gas pocket struck at the Owens well last week, which fired and destroyed the derrick, is now considered a find of value. Gas is still pouring from the well, and though the pressure has not been tested some idea of its extent is gained from the fact that it was necessary to put a heavy steam pressure on the well to put out the fire after it had been burning several days. Oil and gas men in the fleld are fully satisfied that the demonstration proves beyond doubt the presence in close proximity to this field of a large body of natural gas. A little further back it is believed the main body will be struck, and that it will provide a flow of gas sufficient to supply all the needs of a city much larger than Los Angeles. Steps have been taken to secure some territory for gas-well purposes, and it is expected that within a few months all will be in readiness for the sinking of several prospect wells. The strike in the Owens well was made at a depth of 250 feet, and though it cannot be permanent, the flow as yet shows no signs of wakening. Drilling will be resumed at the lead strikes pan out as expected, those interested in the field claim that the development and benefits resulting will be very great, and that a big rush will follow.

The same care exercised in growing fruit is used in picking and packing it, and the fruit of the Richard's orange orchard has already won an enviable reputation in the market. The owners and managers of this orchard are solving the problem of success in orange-growing in the only way that will win complete and permanent success, viz., by the application of intelligence and thoroughness to their business. There is no branch of industry that needs it more than the fruit business."

"When the old creamery plant was destroyed by fire last summer, the greater part of the machinery was destroyed, and as it was of the most expensive class of machinery, it seemed doubtful whether the plant would ever be put in again. J. E. Light, the owner, however, said from the first that as soon as the insurance money was paid over he would again start work.

"For a long time Mr. Light was undecided as to where he would locate the new plant, as the old location was undesirable in many ways, the principal objection being that it was situated too far from the milk supply. The greater part of the milk comes from "Several sites were suggested, all being along the bank of Warm Creek, east of town. But none of the suggestions have been taken. and Mr. Light has purchased a piece of property that he thinks is much more desirable, being right in town and possessiong an important natural advantage. "This will admit of building the creamery on what is called the gravity system, which means that the milk will not have to be handled from the time it is taken from the wagon until the skimmed milk is hauled off and the butter is ready to be 'worked.' "Just who will operate the new plant is not known.

J. E. Light is putting in the plant, but whether he, the old creameey association, or some new man will man-age it, is uncertain. It is very probable, however, that the plant will be leased to an outsider.

"In any event, the news that the creamery is again to begin operation will be welcome, especially to the farmers, many of whom depended upon the creamery for a market for their milk."

Water for Corona,

THE Elsinore Press has the following:

"Corona people have been kicking long and vigorously about being forced to use the alkali water from Elsinore Lake for irrigating their orange orchards. The following from the Corona Courier will be of interest to Elsinorians: "The agitation over the water question, which was at a fever pitch during the summer, has abated since the directors began developments in Temescal Cañon. Sufficient artesian water has been developed in addition to that already on hand to supply all the groves now set under the two pipe lines. Further developments are in progress, and the prospects for a much greater supply are excellent. Should a wet winter come, the question of water will be very much settled. The water board at its last meeting passed a resolution shutting off the Elsinore supply entirely."

Lempoc Apples.

OMPOC, in Santa Barbara county, is noted for its fine apples. The Lompoc Record says:

"There have been shipped from Pajara Valley, Santa Cruz county, the present season, 394 carloads of apples, or about 270,000 boxes. When it is known that an orchard fifteen years old, if of the best and most prolific varieties, set eighty trees to the acre, at a very low production, will yield 400 boxes of naerchantable apples, this vast output from Pajaro Valley would occupy less than one thousand acres. When we realize that there are from 5000 to 8000 acres of choice apple land embraced within the Lompoc Valley and its tributaries, some idea may be formed of the future magnitude of the apple industry with us. If we will plant 5000 acres, the next ten years will find going from this region more than two thousand cases of choice winter apples, every apple free from every kind of parasite or worm. The profits of this industry will exceed that of any other production possible to take from the soil. The orchard will thrive and produce on less mointure than is reulred to produce an average crop of cereals, and year by year grows more productive and profitable. Our farmers must necessarily come to the conclusion that to be prosperous a goodly portion of their lands adapted to fruit must go into apples, and when this shall be entered upon as extensively as we know it should be, the way out of debt is but a question of years. This region is too cold to produce the berry fruits with profit, but apples, pears, and some other fruits and the hardier vegetables can be grown with profit." ## Improving Forest Trails.

In pursuance to these instructions Casey and Carter have established a camp in the West Fork, and will make a trail up that cañon. At the present time it is almost inaccessible except on foot, and we commend their judgment in choosing this place in which to work. Had there been a good trail up this cañon and its tributary, Bear Cañon, a great deal of time and labor would have been saved in reaching the fire at the head of the latter cañon last fall. Commissioner Allen is aware of the importance of the protection of the reserve, and will endeavor to secure the construction of trails; throughout the reservation, so that the most remote parts will be brought within easy communication of some base of supply, as those places are the most dangerous which are hardest to reach, owing to the headway gained by the flames ere any effective fighting can be done. Mr. Taylor will devote his attention to improving the trails in the Dalton and San Dimas cañons."

"The tapestries and furniture have mostly all arrived from the East, and the work of putting them in place is going on rapidly.

"Manager Holmes made a trip to the leading manufacturers of the East some time ago, and personally selected each plece of furniture and tapestry. The measurement of each room was carefully taken before Mr. Holmes's departure, and each plece of furniture and tapestry was selected to occupy some particular place, so that harmony of color and form will prevail in each room throughout the building. In some instances the furniture was selected with the view of carrying out some particular color scheme, the carpets, draperies and upholstery matching the delicate tints of the walls. By this careful selection and the lavish expenditure of money, Mr. Holmes has rendered each room especially attractive and home-like, and different from the usual run of hotels.

The furniture is carved and fashioned in accordance with Moorish ideas, and the beautifully designed draperies and rugs are imported and very valuable. These rooms are seen to the best advantage at night, when dimly lighted by oriental lamps. These rooms also contain some beautiful pieces of Moorish statuary.

In a short time Mr. Holmes will have the roof garden greatly beautified by the addition of potted garden greatly best plants and flowers.

"Gardeners are now at work getting the grounds laid out, and flowers and grass will be planted as soon as they are ready. The rooms of one or two of the floors are now occupied by guests, and the bookings indicate that the building will be filled before the last of January."

Possibilities of a City Lot.

T IS really astonishing how much may be accomplished on an ordinary city lot, by the aid of water and work. The Santa Monica Outlook tells as follows of what one enterprising citizen of that town has accomplished in this line:

"The lot at the corner of Arizona avenue and Third street is 50x150 feet, comprising, therefore, 7500 square fet of ground. It is the property of Dan McCarty, the tailor, a man whose personality is familiar to every resident of Santa Monica.

"Originally, this lot was like about ninety-nine out out of every one hundred lots within the town limits. Now there may be one in every one thousand lots that is equal in productiveness, but that is a matter of doubt. "Deduct from the 7500 feet 400 square feet for Mc-

Carty's little shop and dwelling, 400 feet for the walk extending from front to alley, and 500 feet for wood storage, furnace room, etc., and you have 6150 square feet under tillage.

"Of these fruits one can pick from the trees today temons, oranges, tomatoes, guavas and blackberries. The latter are plucked every month in the year; the guavas have borne three crops this year, and the fourth is now coming on; the tomato trees have given two crops. From the lemon trees ten boxes have already been gathered, and it is estimated that, they now carry an average of one box to each tree. The apple, peach, pear, etc., have borne bountifully of most excellent fruit the present year, as indeed they have every year since coming into bearing. "In the vegetable line, Mr. McCarty grows lettuce continuously the year round—enough to supply a dozen families; potatoes, two crops, and a great many more than he can consume himself; lima beans, three crops the present year from the same plants—an abundance for sale and to give away; parsley and tomatoes for the neighborhood; turnips by the wagonload; long blood beets that have been growing two years, nearly a ton harvested, and many still in the ground; cabbages about a hundred heads, all gathered; onlons in considerable quantity; peas, several hundred pounds; a bushel or so of peppers. The great number of these vegetables are now growing, and the lettuce, beets, parsley, lima beans and tomatoes, in greater or less quantities, are being harvested as needed.

"Besides all these things the proprietor has found room for a few tobacco, lavender and other plants. A hedge of calla lilies lines the 150 feet frontage on Arizona avenue, and there is another hedge along the frontage on Third street.

"Work on this lot began about ten years ago, when it was plowed and planted to eucalyptus and cypress trees. The former soon crowded out the cypress. The eucalyptus trees were cut down for fuel about four years later, the chips and small branches being burned over trees. The former soon crowded out the cypress. The eucalyptus trees were cut down for fuel about four years later, the chips and small branches being burned over the stumps killing the roots. In two years more the roots had decayed sufficiently to permit of plowing again. They had loosened the soil, so that it was as mellow as an ash heap, and was plowed deeply. This was the beginning of the present fruit and vegetable garden. A heavy coating of horse manure was applied, then two or three inches of sand spread over the top and both worked thoroughly into the soil.

"Work and water have done the rest.

"The entire care and cultivation of this garden have been the work of Mr. McCarty himself, besides which he has attended to the duties of his business nine or ten hours per day."

THE Oxnard Courier, in its first issue, says:

"Wednesday morning a party of gentlemen, consisting of Hon. T. R. Bard and D. T. Perkins of Hueneme; E. P. Foster, president of the Bank of Ventura; Attorney L. W. Andrews and G. W. "The occasion was the testing of some of the new machinery now in place, and it gave an opportunity to witness the practical operation of the plant, and form a better idea of the intricate process by which sugar is extracted from the raw beet and the vast and complicated machinery required.

A DISPATCH from New York gives the following information regarding the sale of some copper properties in Arizona:

Fourteen claims adjacent to the great copper mine of W. A. Clark, in Arizona, have passed into the hands of eastern capitalists. Franklin Farrell of Ansonia, Ct., and L. J. Guelich and W. H. Coe of this city are the principal members of the syndicate of purchasers.

"G. W. Hull of Arizona was the principal owner of the properties sold. He was represented by James Shirley, a mining engineer of Prescott, Ariz, The property is located in Jerome, Yavapai county, Ariz, and is known as the United Verde extension.

"Clark's property, the United Verde, is regarded as one of the greatest copper mines in the world, as it pays its owner about $200,000 monthly. The property transferred here is about of the same extent, and is said to carry copper ore of equal value.

"It is the intention of the purchasers to convert the ore into crude copper at the mine and ship the product to copper refining establishments at Bridgeport and Ansonia, Ct."

An Arizona Mountain Town

HE Arizona Gem, published at Flagstaff, recently A contained the following encouraging statement as to the present condition to possibilities of that elevated picturesque town:

The town is situated at the base, and on the south side of the San Francisco Mountains, surrounded by the largest pine forest in the United States. We shall have something more to say about the forest further on in this article. We desire to first speak of the water sup-

"This is obtained from a mammoth spring on the "This is obtained from a mammoth spring on the south side of the San Francisco Mountains, seventeen miles north of Flagstaff. The water is clear, cold, pure and abundant. A first-class system of waterworks will be completed within ten days and then Flagstaff can get almost anything without asking for it. The conditions are such as to make this town a natural clivision point, as Flagstaff can now boast of the greatest amount of pure cold water of any town along the Santa Fé Railroad between Kansas City and Los Angeles. The water is the best for boilers and is more satisfactory to the railroad engineers than any water they can obtain at any other point on the Santa Fé system. The water supply for the locomotives being abundant and of a superior quality makes Flagstaff a desirable division point. The building of the Grand Cañon Railroad from this point, which is now under consideration by capitalpoint. The building of the Grand Cañon Railroad from this point, which is now under consideration by capitalists will be another inducement for the location of the railroad division at Flagstaff. Then it is only a question of time until a railroad will be built from here south through the mineral regions to the great mining camp of Globe. Flagstaff's abundant supply of water will induce the removal of the pickling plant from Bellemont to this place. The abundance of the water and the character of the water will weigh with the Santa the character of the water will weigh with the Santa Fe Company. Another consideration is that the greatest number of ties are obtainable near Flagstaff, and with the plant located here would save hauling and handling the ties so often, besides hauling water to supply the plant during dry seasons.

"Among the enterprises induced by our water supply will be a steam flouring mill which will be built next

"Among the enterprises induced by our water supply will be a steam flouring mill which will be built next June, and a steam laundry will be put in in the spring. A wool scouring mill is almost sure to be located here, as this county produces almost one-half of the wool grown in Arizona. Enterprises not dreamed of will spring up and make Flagstaff the leading city in the Territory. The new mill plant of the Arizona Lumber and Timber Company is located here and will soon be ready to manufacture lumber of a superior quality as well as any quantity. This will be the finest and best-equipped mill in the West. It will supply more territory with lumber than any mill in the United States, and consequently the volume of business done by this enterprising company will exceed any lumber company in the West. Flagstaff leads in the manufacture of lumber as well as in sheep and wool growing, which is extensively carried on in this county. Lumber, sheep and cattle are paying industries and with proper protection and encouragement will be sources of wealth for all time to come. As we said in the beginning of this article, Flagstaff is surrounded by the most extensive pine forest in the United States, and it is almost an impossibility to ever exhaust this belt of timber by the manufacture of lumber. This pine forest furnishes a shaded pasture for sheep and cattle. It is also one of the greatest health givers as well as wealth producers in the West, if not in the United States. Flagstaff is fast becoming a great health resort and can truly boast of the finest summer climate on earth. Hundreds of visitors spend the summer and fall months in Flagstaff and there is a noted increase each year. It is estimated that twice as many persons will spend next summer here as ever did before. Pure mountain air and water will draw people from the heated and crowded cities, and that twice as many persons will spend next summer here as ever did before. Pure mountain air and water will draw people from the heated and crowdel cities, and they invariably make for the Skylight City, where the blessings of healthy air and pure cold water abounds. Flagstaff is the tourists' paradise, for it is surrounded by Nature's greatest wonders. Among the grandest and most wonderful are: Walnut Canon, the home of the most wonderful are: Walnut Cañon, the home of the Cliff Dwellers, Sunset Mountain, Cave Dwellings, Elack Crater, Cataract Cañon, Natural Bridge, Montezuma Well and Castle, and the Grand Cañon of the Colorado. The greatest mineral deposits are at the Grand Cañon mines, which are about sixty miles from Flagstaff. The mines in this locality have not been fully developed, but it is known that copper exists there in large quantities and other metals have been discovered. No doubt constitution of the control of the siderable work will be done in the Grand Cañon mines siderable work will be done in the Grand Cañon mines next spring and they may prove to be very profitable property. Everything points to Flagstaff as the gem city by reason of her resources, water, health, climate, location and grand scenery. The town is inhabited by a live, generous, intelligent and progressive people, and in less than twelve months she will be the most prosperous city on the Santa Fé Pacific Railroad. Time will prove that this is not idle talk, nor a dream, but preality.

WOMAN AND HOME.

FASHION'S FORECAST,

[FROM A REGULAR CONTRIBUTOR.]

N EW YORK, Jan. 13.—Having rung out the old year, the caterers of fashion's follies are ringing in a number of changes, if not distinct novelties. What we have kept over from last year are chiefly trains, long tight sleeves and high, tight collars, but on these things the dressmakers are going to exercise an improving influence. They are pledged to cut every gown en even the pretty muslins and dimities and the adorable chintzes that are glorifying the January openings, and they have sworn themselves not to make another silk or cotton dress without an overskirt.

These draperies will at first be only the long skirts of the coat-shaped dress waists, such as are already seen here and there, but it does not require a very prophetic soul to see that by Easter time the full-fledged overdress will be enjoying undisputed reign. For the overuress will be enjoying undisputed reign. For the present it falls from the hips in what is called peplum form to the knees in front, and longer behind, though the popularity of the Louis XV fronts is unabated. The study of the tailors is always after long perpendicular lines, and nothing short and bunchy is allowed about the hips. the hips.

When the time comes to discuss wash goods, it will be found that all reliance is to be laid on the long-tried virtues of the ruffle. Just now we are still toomuch occupied by woolens and furs to think without a shiver of cotton and linen, but it is as well to know that the present latitude of fashion allows a dresswaist to be cut with knee-long tails or short off at the hips.

Where a close basque is adopted it is invariably cut in a series of seven graceful scallops about the hips. These curves are not ornamented with anything, and, in fact, after a season of frivolity, the tailor dress is regaining its old tidy simplicity of outline.

At the start of the year a number of handsome new tailor frocks have been noticed, and chiefly in periwinkle blue. Their waists fit, back and front, without a wrinkle, the skirt is fully trained, of course, and a pronounced tendency is toward a renewal of what used to be known as a complete suit; that is, a waist and skirt, and then a longish coat of the same goods.

With such costumes the elevating influence of the smart jabot is most keenly felt. There are jabots and jabots, but the one that now has the longest train of followers is the largest. It is either a very wide limonsine ribbon folded twice about the neck and tied in a really gigantic bow in front, or it is a long piece of white satin, laid twice around the throat, tied in a four-in-hand or Ardsley knot in front and letting fall a couple of lace-edged ends nearly to the knees. With the limonsine ribbon a collar that has turnover, hemstitched bands is worn, and a smart little pin is thrust through the knot of the bow. Butterfly bows of white, pale blue and Nile green tulle or chiffon, fastened to a stock of the same, are still seen broadcast among the women whose winter coats are dark and button high. These airy nothings the tailors themselves not only recommend, but make.

Inese airy nothings the tailors themselves not only recommend, but make.

In spite of prejudice, women continue, more or less, to use certain types of plaid goods. The Mackenzle, MacDonald, Forbes and Campbell checks still brighten our landscape, and the quite simple skirts are made up with a bias seam down the front. Such skirts in the dark green, blue and violet MacDonald plaid are purchasable at the January sales, prettily made up on silk foundations, and the proper thing to wear with one is a coat body of solid green, blue, or violet cloth scalloped over the hips, clasping the figure snugly with small plaid-faced revers turning back just under the chin and a chiffon jabot flowering out on this.

Absolutely simple, comfortable sleeves are typical of all these dresses. The wrist is long, but cut off plainly round the hand, and the one bit of coquetry the tailors assume is more or less decoration on coats by the aid of small bullet-shaped enameled buttons. These buttons, by the way, are peculiar to 1899 and are different from the colored crystal ones that are still in good fashionable standing.

If you question both tailors and dressmakers as to collars, they will say that excelsior is still the cry in that direction. By constant wear of very high neckbands, women are destroying all the beauty of their throats and giving their heads a stiff, haughty poise. A fair share of collars are made of silk or satin, finely pleated on to the stiffest buckram and cut with points to fit high behind the ear. Newer than that is a collar cut with the ear points, and then a third higher peak directly in the back. This fear peak often runs half way up the height of the head, and sometimes it is split open down the center and revers spread away, faced with a bright color or lace.

The serviceable gown, the toilet that fits into every breach and is admissable on all occasions is still black It has an underskirt and waist of black silk, that, by preference, is not taffeta, but that is cut to fit and ap preference, is not taffeta, but that is cut to fit and appear like a Princess slip, tight on the hips and wide at the foot. Over this falls rather coarse black silk honeycomb Russian net, garnished in either of two ways; with spangles or with three sizes of black silk braid. The braid is rather the smarter of the two, and it describes large, fanciful figures over the drop-net skirt and net body. Such a gown is practically indestructible and displays a richness of effect that is always agreeable. If it is made up so that the sleeves can be removed and the top of the waist lifted out it can serve equally well as a grand dinner or sober church costume. With gowns like these, and they are tremendously popular, women wear necklaces of the brightest outfit with some jeweled pendant string on the lowest chain, and they put tall black spangled tulle wings in their hair.

The serviceable evening gown for a young girl is par excellence a Tosca net in black, made over a second net skirt of pale blue, or green, or yellow, which in turn is hung upon an underskirt of soft silk or sateen, the same shade. The black top skirt may be hung with spangles, but something more economical as well as newer, is a net skirt with designs worked out on it in threads of colored chenille.

Such a dress wears well, is proof against crumpling and is wonderfully youthful. After being squeezed into a heavy trunk a shake dissipates the wrinkles, and while the bodice may be high in the throat, it must by no means have any sleeves, if it is designed for evening wear. All women who wear these cut gowns, and they are almost universally popular, perfume them carefully, so that at every motion the filmy floating goods will cast forth on the air a poetic odor of lilacs, white rose, heliotrope or violets. heliotrope or violets.

Early in the winter the hat that turned up in front justly received its due of favoritism and flattery. Its successor in the spring will be an airy thing of silk muslin or tulle set on the side of the head, and with a wide spangled brim turned up on all sides equally. Already we see some lucky women, who have their headgear all hot from Paris, wearing these delicate glittering crowns, but meantime a great many sensible souls content themselves with pretty tulle trifles they can really fashion with their own hands. These are very popular for theater wear and are made first of a ring of hat wire about the circumference of a sancer. Wound tightly around this is black satin or white satin ribbon, and then loosely goes a winding of tulle. The tulle ring just encircles the top of the head and at some point in its circumference, usually just in front, a tuft of silver wheat, with two loops of tulle, is fastened. This simple ornament passes for a bonnet and is a becoming coronet and a showy one on any head.

NEW STORIES ABOUT LISZT.

CHARACTERISTIC INCIDENTS TOLD BY ONE OF HIS FUPILS.

[BY A SPECIAL CONTRIBUTOR.]

ISZT was my teacher for many years, and many are L the charming recollections of that period in my life. As Schuman said: "If you only heard Liszt play and didn't see him, you lost half the pleasure," so wonderful was his personality.

I shall never forget how a young Magyar tried to play a sonata of Beethoven before him one day. "Piano, piano," cried Liszt. "Piano, softly! Let it sing, let it sing! Can't you see piano written there?" cried he still more sharply, but the young patriot only grew more nervous and played the harder.

At last Liszt took his hands from the keys, saying, half-angrily, half-laughingly: "Do you know, my young friend, what the field sergeant does when the recruits cannot tell the difference between right and left? He ties a bundle of straw on their right arms and a bundle of hay on their left, and then gives the command, 'Hay, straw!' We shall have to try this plan with you for 'piano' and 'forte!' Now, then, give old Beethoven a chance. Hay! Hay! Hay! Well! Now, Straw! Straw!—plenty of straw—still more straw." and Lizzt laughed till the tears came. "Straw, straw, pathiars, but straw!"

and Liszt laughed till the tears came. "Straw, straw, nothing but straw!"
But even this had no effect on the young man, so at last Liszt said: "Perhaps I can explain it better on the piano," and seating himself, he played the allegretto of Beethoven's seventh symphony. We were all so moved that we sat breathless until at lest a little Russian woman jumped up and rushed out of the room, crying: "J'ai peur! j'ai peur." Liszt turned around on his chair to say: "Well, what's the matter?' and after he learned, he turned to the young pianist: "So, you see, my friend, that hay and straw in proper propor-tion produce good results."

Here is an anecdote of his early life, as related by Liszt himself: "Richard Wagner, Bulow and I were all quite young when we lived together in Leipsig, and had a good time. That is, I enjoyed myself, but Wagner was already fermenting with his political and philosophical ideas, and our prosaic circumstances offered little ground for the idealists of the future. We called Bulow "Kritikus," and we—especially I—always feared his sharp tongue a little. Of course all of us had very little money, but Wagner put our siender purse to great strains. He could not bear moneyworries, and we let him feel them as little as possible.

A SPRING SHOPPING COSTUME.

Once, after a long autumn, it became cold yery, suddenly, and Wagner with his "nerves" suffered from the sudden change in the temperature. He demanded a heated room at once. For two whole days the debate raged between him and Bulow as to the immediate purchase of wood with our reduced purse. I was not asked, because Bulow knew that I would yield, but he as treasurer, contended that it was ridiculous to buy wood in the month of September. 'But I am freezing,' said Wagner in a rage, to which the inexorable Bulow suggested that he go out and get warm by running, or warm himself by his muse. Laughing at his cheap, spiteful advice, Bulow and I went out.

"But when we returned, after two hours, we were thunderstruck to find Wagner in the room heated to suffocation. He sat at his writing table, deep in his work. His face was very red.

"Where?" began Bulow, but the words stuck in his throat, for a glance around the room showed him how wagner had helped himself. Several chairs and our work tables lay on the floor, permanently crippled; Wagner had cut off their, legs and made the fire with them. Bulow was speechless with rage. But I stood at the door and laughed till the tears came at this fingernous way of helping oneself. Bulow lamented that we would have to replace the landlady's chairs and tables and that we could not sit down or work.

"Wagner answered spitefully: 'I have what I needed!' Fellows like you, who do nothing but go wulking, need neither chairs nor tables. If you had given me, the money right off your valuable furniture would still be in existence—you wished it so! Firewood would have been cheaper!' Next day I received a liftle proney, and bought firewood and new chairs and tables. Wagner picked out the best for himself, and I said to him, laughingly: 'Say, you, listen!' I am going to insure this new furniture against loss by fire immediately?"

THE PHYSIOLOGY CLASS.

[Washington Star:] There is a lady occupied in the instruction of the juvenile mind who is quite willing to confess that the pupils who attend her classes do not do all the learning. Some of the small folk under her tuition occasionally astonish her with their superior knowledge of the modernly developed resources of the English language. A lecture on hygiene had been included in the programme for the day, and she had taken care to show the effects of alcohol and tobacco upon the system. She impressed her teachings by means of anatomical charts, which gave especial lucidity to her remarks when she came to warning the little girls, years in advance of any practical need, of the dangers of tight lacing. A line of prophecy—similar to old-fashioned mottoes—may be written and wrapped about each nut before it is hung upon the tree.

If a number of English walnuts have been included among the nuts, when they are opened the shells may have tiny candles put in each, and then they are started out upon a voyage in a tub of water. Each boat or shell is named as the candle is lighted and set adrift. The boats that sail together will be partners for life. A penny should be dropped in one side of the tub and a ring in the other. The boat that drifts toward the ring will marry for love; if toward the penny, for money.

THE PHYSIOLOGY CLASS.

[Washington Star:] There is a lady occupied in the instruction of the juvenile mind who is quite willing to confess that the pupils who attend her classes do not do all the learning. Some of the small folk under her tuition occasionally astonish her with their superior knowledge of the modernly developed resources of the English language. A lecture on hygiene had been included in the programme for the day, and she had taken care to show the effects of alcohol and tobacco upon the system. She impressed her teachings by means of anatomical charts, which gave especial lucidity to her remarks when she came to warning the little girls, years in advance of any practical need, of the dangers of tight lacing. One of the little girls, whose home surroundings are of the sort in which ease, rather than elegance of expression, is sought, listened with profound attention.

IT WAS A VERY CLOSE CALL FOR PEGGY AND HER WEALTH.

[BY A SPECIAL CONTRIBUTOR,]

ELP me think! I have got to do something. I feel so—so responsible," Peggy said to Mabel, who answered, sticking out her chin: "I do hope, Peggy Crayshaw, nobody else won't never die, and leave you a hundred-dollar bill. You ain't good for anything in the world, since your father brought it home.

"If he had just taken it with him!" Peggy sighed; "mother wanted him to, but he said it was safer here. As if anybody would think of picking pockets at a wedding! And they won't be back until almost night! It's ten miles at least to Cousin Fanny Gorham's."

"I never saw a hundred-dollar bill. Let me lock at yours—if you know where it is?" Mabel said almost pensively. Peggy gave her red skirts an airy flirt, saying: "Of course I know where it is! Do you reckon they would not tell me, so I couldn't get it first thing if the house should catch fire?"

"I thought maybe they hid it, until they could have the house should catch fire?"

"I thought maybe they hid it, until they could buy you those two cows with it," Mabel answered meekly. Peggy smiled, but said austerely: "Mother said I must not be vain and purse-proud, and I don't mean to bebut it will be nice to have a thousand dollars all my own, when I'm twenty-one. And father says he will give me the keep of the cows for the calves, so the milk and butter in eight years will make me a nice little fortune—"

"Oho! You're like the milkmaid over in the back of the spelling book!" Mabel broke in. Peggy grew very sober. "It's thinkin' about her makes me so uneasy," she said. "Suppose something should go with the money! You know in the story books something always does happen to the money, when it is left at home, with nobody but girls to take care of it?"
"You surely ain't 'fraid of robbers?" Mabel laughed.
"There never was one in the county, father says. Nor tramps neither-

"You never can tell what's going to happen," Peggy said. "Anyway, I'm going to get out the money, and we'll study up where we'll put it, so it shall be perfectly safe.

fectly safe."

"Why! It's just like any other bill! I thought it would be ever so big," Mabel said, as Peggy unlocked her father's desk, touched the spring of the secret drawer, and drew out a bit of crisp green paper. Together they spread it flat on the desk, and traced the figures with eager, happy fingers. "You see it's hundred all right!" Peggy said, with a note of triumph which she tried vainly to subdue. Mabel squinted at it critically. "If I was you, I'd pin it tight to my under-body," she said, "then it couldn't get lost, and nobody could find it."

"That won't do at all. Of course robbers would look in our clothes first thing, after they didn't find it in the desk," Peggy answered. "Besides, we're goin' in the orchard for a basket of sweetings, and it might work loose" loose."

'O, I know where it'll be safe! Let's put it under Seraphine's new face before we sew it on. Nobody in the world would ever find it there," Mabel cried. Peggy heard her almost with envy. Seraphine was her bigbest doll, a stout, bunchy rag damsel, who had a new staring, clean, white countenance every year of her life. If the bill, neatly folded, made her face somewhat bloated, as Mabel said, nobody that ever lived would guess the reason for it. Peggy added, "We musn't put her away in the closet, or a drawer. That might make the robbers think—we'll just throw her there on the window seat, where we can keep an eye on her, and we will look like we had been playing with her and haddropped her." dropped her.

dropped her."

"Yes," Mabel nodded, "and if anybody comes, we'll pick her up and slip out to the orchard. They never can find us if we get up high where the leaves are so thick, in the tops of the trees."

"Let's go there right now! I'm apple hungry," Peggy said, reaching for the basket. Mabel picked up Seraphine, but Feggy said with emphasis: "Mabel Bert, is that all the sense you have got? Suppose we met the robbers right at the door as we came back? They'd know right off we had a reason for lugging Seraphine around!"

know right off we had a reason for lugging Seraphine around!"

"They'd just think we were fond of her. I am!" Mabel said stoutly, cuddling Seraphine and smoothing her red skirts affectionately. But Peggy snatched the doll, and flung her against the window seat with a resounding thump, then banged the door behind her and ran with Mabel for the apples.

They were gone only a minute—at least it seemed so to themselves, but when they got back, a tall man hallooed lustily at the gate.

"Say! Come here, you young misses! Are the people at this place all dead or asleep? My name is John Dutch—I've come twenty miles to fetch Squire Crayshaw that filly he said he'd buy last week."

"You'll have to come in and wait, Mr. Dutch. He won't be home for ever so long," Peggy said, hospitably, setting open the door. Mr. Dutch shook his head. "Can't wait," he said, but got down from his horse and led through the yard gate a haltered filly, the very prettiest thing on four hoofs Peggy had ever seen. The filly pulled back, then nipped at Dutch as though angry. But when Mabel ran up to her she put down her dainty head to be stroked.

head to be stroked.

"She is mad with you because you made her come too fast. See how her flanks heave!" Peggy said. Dutch smiled oddly as he answered: "I had to come fast. I am bound to go back tonight, and the days are short now. Say, miss, didn't your father leave the money for me? I can't well go without it—the filly, you see, is justly partly mine, and 'tother fellow's a cross-grained chap that don't trust anybody."

"He didn't leave any money at all, but my hundred dollars," Peggy said, trying to speak carelessly. Dutch laughed again. "Funny!" he said, "but that's just the price of this beauty. She's worth double, but I—well, I don't like to be partner with a skinflint. Suppose you buy the beast, seein' the squire ain't here—and then tell him if he wants her, why! he must give you two

"O, Peggy! Don't!" Mabel said eagerly, but Peggy frowned at her. "Don't you mind her, Mr. Dutch," she said. "Of course I'll give you the money. Father must have forgotten you were coming, but I won't make him pay me quite two hundred. That wouldn't be fair—would it?"
"Anything's fair in a horse trade" Dutch said. "But said. "Or course I'll give you the money. Father must have forgotten you were coming, but I won't make him pay me quite two hundred. That wouldn't be fair—would it?"

"Anything's fair in a horse trade," Dutch said. "But let's finish our bargain. I must be movin' fast. Get the money, please, while I write a receipt."

"In just a minute," Peggy said, leading the way to her father's desk. As Dutch sat down he looked apprehensively over his shoulder through the open door, and said almost in a whisper: "Make haste!"

Hand in hand Peggy and Mabel ran to find Seraphine. Seraphine had vanished. Yet the room was undisturbed, the windows fast, the door securely latched, Tipsy, the white kitten, sleeping peacefully beside the fire. The children looked at each other awestruck; then began to cry. Dutch darted in to them. "If you've been fooling me you'll be sorry for it," he said, savagely. "You had that hundred dollars—I know it—I know about your aunt's will. Give it to me. Quick! Quick! Do you hear? I'm bound to get away."

"Hardly—when you leave a stolen filly plain to view!" a man said, stepping behind Dutch and seizing both wrists. Dutch struggled hard, but was promptly knocked down by the Sheriff and his deputies, who had been hot on his trail. "I really thought better of you, Hankins," the Sheriff said, as he snapped the handcusff on his prisoner. "It isn't like you to botch things this way. I suppose, though, you have grown careless—as you had stolen several horses, and got away with them, you thought you'd make the riffle with the eighth, no matter what you did."

"How did he get my hundred-dollar bill? Make him tell! Make him give it back! He stole it while we were in the orchard!" Peggy cried, shrilly. The Sheriff looked significantly at Hankins. Hankins shook his head. "I came after it," he said defiantly, "but sure as I'm in these bracelets, if it's gone, somebody else got it. If I had got it, you'd a-never caught me. The stock's dead beat—I'd a-left it, and struck for the railroad. I knew you were not two mile whole fortune."

Just as she said it there came a queer lumbering pitpat on the kitchen stairs, which ran up in one corner, and led to a low, dark closet. Peggy and Mabel had looked it through as best they might by light of the stable lantern, turning inside out everything but Bose's box bed beside the warm chimney, in which Bose himself, most waggish of shepherd puppies, lay curled into a fuzzy ball. Bose was coming down the stairs now, moving sidewise, with something scarlet and heavyish in his mouth. At sight of his master he tumbled down the last three steps, dashed across the floor, and laid the something at his feet, waggling his tail and looking up, as if for a word of praise.

"Why, it's Seraphine! He carried her off to his bed!"
Mabel screamed. Peggy had her arms around the puppy's neck. "Oh, you darling! You saved my hundreddollar bill!" she said.

THE WAY PRETTY POLLY PAPERED HER BEDROOM [BY A SPECIAL CONTRIBUTOR.]

UST a year ago Polly was in despair. Her bedroom walls were dreadfully shabby and had needed doing over for some time. She had been promised that the autumn repairs should include a new wall-paper for her sanctum, and all summer she had hesitated between masses of pink azaleas climbing on a trellis over a creamy background, and bouquets scattered over satinypink and white stripes a la pompadour.

But the furnace needed repairs likewise the kitchen range, and then there had been a new bath-room put in, and the bills proved as unexpectedly large, as such things invariably do, so when they were all paid there was nothing left for Polly's papers.

When the sad news was broken to her, she climbed

When the sad news was broken to her, she climbed up to her bedroom, and looked at the walls dismally. But Polly was not a girl to let the grass grow under her feet, so she set at once to work to pull out her treasures and see what she could do about it. Among other things, she unearthed a roll of posters which she had at one time begun to collect. She had gotten together quite a number, and these she tried to arrange against the wall. But this was not satisfactory either. "I couldn't stand baking powder, or the dates for the races in letters three inches long staring me in the face every morning," said Polly, so that wouldn't do. Finally a bright idea struck her. She remembered an old story by Mrs. Harriet Beecher Stowe, in which a girl papers the dining-room with Pompelan figures, arranged in panels. There were so many windows and doors in Polly's room that the walls were naturally divided into panels. Moreover, the paper lent itself readily to the scheme, the pattern being very subdued in color, in tones of cream and tan, picked out with gilt. "Cartridge paper would have been better, but after all, this is not half bad," said Polly, and set to work forthwith. By the ald of a sharp pair of scissors she soon had a number of figures ready to apply.

So she arranged, and rearranged, fastening the figures firmly into position by means of pins and thumb tacks

So she arranged, and rearranged, fastening the figures firmly into position by means of pins and thumb tacks, until she was entirely satisfied with the effect, then carefully pasted the figures into place.

Over the dainty dressing table dance pretty Geisha girls from a Daly's theater poster of a year or two back. In the narrow panel over a door run the spirited horses of a race-meeting announcement. For still another and broader panel are arranged covers cut from various magazines, and all this costing, as Polly says, "not a sou marquis," whatever that may be.

And you ought to see Polly's bedroom now!

Of course, during the year, she has made several additions. A certain lovely poster of Scribner's Magazine, which was too beautiful to cut, has been simply framed, and two others, of more recent date, representing, respectively, a cavalry and naval officer, and framed in a narrow line of black wood. Her most recent acquisition actually in place, is this season's poster announcing Miss Julia Arthur's appearance as A Lady of Quality. This is more eeffctive, representing a beautiful head, wreathed with vine leaves, standing out from a background of pale gold. It has been framed in gilded wood, and "skyed" because of its heroic proportions, over the mirror, surmounting the mantleplece.

Any suggestions as to doing over the room this season have been received with the silent contempt they deserved.

THE ROSY BABY.

that silly quarrel; and he wanted to see how she would greet him. She saw him and nodded unsmilingly.

He read the advertisements opposite; he looked at the rosy baby.

It was meditatively licking a yellow transfer. It had very pink worsted shoes, and its toes turned in. It wore a brown cap trimmed in fur. A break in the fur just over one temple gave it a coquetitish expression. It had very black lashes, and it rolled its blue eyes in sidelong glances under them.

She caught one of the glances and smiled at the baby. The baby lowered the transfer and gazed at her with a wide stare of candid, calm indifference. Then it cast a sidelong glance at him.

He was automatically tapping his knee with a folded newspaper. The rosy baby was attracted by the motion—watched, and craved, then grabbed. He started and drew away the paper. A series of threatening chokes began; and the baby grabbed again. He moved the paper an infinitesimal distance further; the upper slope of a wail arose. He held the paper quickly toward the baby. The rosy baby took full possession, chuckled, held the paper in one hand, and with the other hand on his shoulder obtained an upright position in the seat. It put one pudgy hand in his face and gurgled. He winced. She forced down the corners of her mouth and held her breath. The car joited; the baby dropped the paper. He was immovable until an incipient wail gave the signal. Then he picked up the paper. The baby took it, laughed, and threw it down again. At the usual signal he stooped and returned it. The tired woman pulled the baby down into her lap.

Ho took out his handkerchief and mopped his brow. The rosy baby watched the handkerchief. When the hand holding it rested on his knee, the baby caught a corner and pulled it through his unresisting fingers. It held the handkerchief above its nose and looked at him. "Peep! Boo!" it said.

Then she took pity. "Peep, Boo! baby!" she whispered. The baby liked her better with the mirth in her eyes. "Peep, Boo" it responded.

The car had stopped and gave a jerk before starting. The tired woman jumped up nervously, snatched the han her wake.

The handkerchief and paper had fallen in her lap. She looked at them in dismay. She had but two blocks more to travel. She looked at him. He was studiously informing himself where to buy the best skirt binding. She moved over the intervening space. "Please, sir!" she said when she was at his elbow, "are these yours? They were left with me." Then she laughed.

And the feud was over.

they pack pork, read Ella Wheeler Wilcox and wear diamonds.

Of course, all the women in attendance upon the function crowded around Zangwill in sheer hero worship. He suffered them to press his hand and look into "his eyes and chatter about the "real Ghetto," regardless of the fact that Zangwill knew that they wouldn't know a ghetto if it were to go by them with a sign on it.

On the outskirts of the little throng was a woman celebrated for her society width, a really clever woman—for Chicago. Her husband is a pork packer and she reads French novels in the original and wears diamonds at breakfast. She was a swell of the swell, the real cremedementhe of Chicago society. She rather hated to think that her hostess had been the one to give the function in Mr. Zangwill's honor, so she made up her mind to let fly a bit of her wit at the distinguished author to prove to those within hearing that at times his repartee might fail him. She approached Zangwill, and, raising her lorgnette, surveyed him as she might have a dog in a kennel show.

"Mr. Zangwill," she said, "do you care for pig's feet?" Those around her held their breaths.

By Rev. Asa S. Fiske, D.D.,

Gunton Temple Memorial Presbyterian Church, Washington, D. C.

"For the nation and kingdom that will not serve thee shall perish."-[Isaiah lx, 12,

HE on-going of the universe is the manifestation of God in providence. The plan of His government is the perfecting of the great society of humanity. For human relations the law is love and help. The man, the people, the nation, the race, that will not enter this law of service with loyal purpose, is running so counter to its own structure and to the great on-going and up-coming as to be in deadly case. It is per-ishing and shall perish utterly, defeating and destroying Lo, the highways of history cluttered with the wrecks of nations which have forgotten to serve God! the vast wastes of Mesopotamia, garden of the earth and ancient seat of primeval empire. Study Egypt, Greece and Rome, fascinating but for their ruins. See decaying nations of today which a few centuries agone stood, the magnificence of the world. Behold the ruin of national character, of manhood, in these decaying peoples. Contemporary histories, to which none can be blind, are awful commentaries on the words of our text.

From this point of view let us reflect for a moment on the history which our republic has made during the the history which our republic has made during the great year which has recently drawn to its close. If opened with a mighty wailing if infinite distress from beautiful perishing Cuba at our very doors. For years we had tried diplomacles in vain. We now protested again and have due notice that the conditions were intolerable to us and to humanity. Warnings, diplomacies, national declarations of armed intervention were all tried to no effect. So, reluctantly, came war—the solitary war of all the ages undertaken with an unselfish, an altruistic purpose. What followed need not here be rehearsed—a hand unseen shielded and directed us—till at last proud Spain implored of us peace. The protocol was one of magnanimity; no such terms were ever offered before by a completely victorious nation to a conquered foe. And finally on Christmas eve, came to the hand of our Executive this sublime Christmas gift from God, the treaty of peace.

Every step in all the struggle was a providential necessity, taken in the interest of mankind. It was Providence commanding humanity. I believe the treaty will be of huge advantage to Spain. It estops a perpetual drain on her resources of men and money in colonies which she has been impotent to govern or develop. It relieves her of the opprobrium of a rule which branded her through the civilized world as barbarous, but which she had no genius to reform. Our gold will be a help toward her financial solvency. And now, with little more of field to exploit outside her own Iberian peninsula, she may perhaps turn with humble pride but better purpose to the development of her own industries and resources, to the education of her own people, and the building of a reputable future to replace the vain glories of a shameful and cruel past. God grant it!

The result to us? Consciousness of great deeds generously undertaken for those who were ready to perish. Assurance that patriotism and heroism have not died out amongst us. Above all, I believe, stands the realization that God has opened to us an oppo great year which has recently drawn to its close. If opened with a mighty wailing if infinite distress from These peoples thrown on our care number nigh four times as many as our fathers were when our nationality was achieved. The spaces they occupy are like two New Englands and New Yorks—tropical regions fruitful in all products beyond imagination; so ranging in elevation as to give great variety of climates and the products tion as to give great variety of climates and the products of many zones; populations of many types from black through the browns and yellows to the dark Spanish hue. Education ranges among them from absolute barbarism to cultivated civility. But the masses are unschooled. Less than 20 per cent. can read or write in any language. With liberty they desire learning; when the chance is given they will flock into schools. With liberty and schools they want a free faith. Already we hear voices from all these islands declaring readiness for a free Christianity and its book. These voices are not from missionaries, but from the people themselves. Admiral Dewey and Gen. Otis unite in saying that the Filipinos are eager for the new light and ready for that which shall bring it, urging its immediate initiation with all possible energy and pledging it their enthusiastic support.

Here, then, is the status of the case. With no such initial purpose whatever, the war has thrown into our hands, "in trust for civilization," these immense regions and these teeming populations. It found them in bloody and exterminating insurrection, furiously embittered by the long internecine struggle. It gives them peace. It plants us as their protectors and their guides. In no case shall we get of them gross gains; they will be for the present but a burden.

Return them to Spain? That is impossible; to have done that would have been infamy. Turn them over to done that would have been infamy. Turn them over to other powers? We cannot. War would flame over Europe in a month. Abandon Cuba and the Philippines to themselves? Witness the bloody collisions of a few weeks ago in Cuba. Witness the sorry work already in the Philippines. Call your American common sense to witness. What can you expect? These peoples are ignorant. They have no traditions of acquaintance with a experience in self-government. Their only notions government in any sort are derived from the out-ageous misgovernment of Spain. They know nothing f free government even by contact with free peoples ither in trade or through literature. Has a four-funcred-year experience of Spanish misrule miraculously enabled people kept in profound ignorance and poverty with all their attendant cylis, to establish themselves at The he described to the once in wise, free and safe independence? That should be miracle indeed! Their experience of government would make them in authority tyrants, and under a weak authority insurrectionaries. To lift our hand of strong and controlling guidance from Cuba would let Cuban and Spaniard fly at each other's throats in the fierce revenges of the centuries.

The like must be said of the Philippines. Rather than that, with the horrors of new San Domingoes, we would better have left Spain alone to destroy them than turn them over to self-destruction! These tropical, mixed and passionate races—capable, I believe of a high civilization; tractable, teachable and equal to progress under a firm and kindly control—are yet incapable of immediate, wise and safe absolute autonomy. They can be, little by little, set into the functions of office, as already in Santiago, and as set fouth in the President's recent "home-rule" proclamation, can be enlisted into military and naval service. But our military authorities must frame for them a free public-school system, supported by their own revenues, exempt from all ecclesiastical interference and open to all; must set up for them the forms of municipal and provincial government, police and judicial regulations, sanitary conditions and ordered industry, and establish the home on the basis them the forms of municipal and provincial government, police and judicial regulations, sanitary conditions and ordered industry, and establish the home on the basis of indissoluble marriage—in fact must set in good working order complete governmental establishments, working into them as rapidly as may be all fit elements of the native populations till they are accustomed to the forms of civilized freedom, trained in its substance and prepared for a more complete autonemy. Then they will be sure to continue these beneficent institutions when the military gives place to the civil authority.

Leaving the Philippines to themselves, you would have a dozen rival petty, powerless and warring so-called republics, soon to be devoured by one and another of the European powers, at mighty risks of great European wars. We cannot leave such a Pandora's box to the future of this world—breeding places for pestilence, scenes of brutal wars, hopeless of progress. We are set of God to be their guardians till they can go alone. We and no other of the earth's great powers can take that role without imminent danger to the world's peace.

Beyond that present guardianship we need only wait

Beyond that present guardianship we need only wait on Providence for further direction. There has been no moment in this great year at which any man could forecast for ninety days what it would be incumbent on us to do. Our administration has wisely waited to see and has moved with ever fresh guidance. Forecast is yet impossible for even a month to come. The most that we can say today is, "For the present the responsibility is ours for shaping the affairs of these insular realms in order to futures of prosperity and greatness." No man today can wisely venture to fix the date of safe issue into an absolutely independent career for any island of them all. The politicians are rash indeed when they plan party platforms on the swiftly-shifting conditions of these vast questions.

For the future: These tropical regions are to be made, by enforcement of scientific sanitation, safely habitable for all races, and for the natives. These most fruitful soils are to be made prolific beyond computation by ordered and intelligent industry. Their products are to be made staple articles of a safe and profitable commerce. Life, property and enterprises of all sorts are to be made secure, by whatever shape of guarantee time shall prove the fittest. Religion must be the free dictate of the conscience. Education must be accessible to whomsoever will.

dictate of the conscience. Education must be accessible to whomsoever will.

These peoples are to be impressed with the immense contrast between the spirit of Spain and the free Christian republic. They must learn the vital temper of the Occident in contrast with the slumberous Orient, Missionary enterprises are to have free course and be glorified. God hath opened to us wide the door to the most immense and fascinating work of civilization and Christfanization the world has ever seen. Ten to twelve Christianization the world has ever seen. Ten to twelve millions of people, in the most luxuriant of all the islands of all the seas, who have been bound fast in superstition and oppression, embittered and insurgent under civil and ecclesiastical tyranny, robbed, corrupted and outraged, have emerged into the care of the great modern Christian results. outraged, have emerged into the care of the great mod-ern Christian republic, better fitted to initiate them into modern liberty and life than any other nation ever was or now is. They are in the sunburst of a magnificent morning. So soon as they feel the blessed contrast be-tween Spain's misrule and America's fostering care, they will shout their gratitude, embrace with joy the new regime and enter with exultation their great career?

I believe we are now entering upon an experiment not ess significant than that of our own independence over I believe we are now entering upon an experiment not less significant than that of our own independence over a hundred years ago—the experiment, viz, of starting, steadying, fostering and building into splendor a wholly new type of civilization and Christianity—a type for the tropics and for the Orient—for the vast majority of the race of man. We shall infuse something of our cool and level-headed temperament into the florid and passionate tropical nature; and something of our restless Anglo-Saxon energy into tropical and oriental somnolence and indolence; shall brace their laxity of morals with the sturdler fiber of the temperate zones; shall give them the Christian marriage and home; shall establish them in forms of government which are the ripest, richest fruit of the experience of all the ages; and to crown all, shall give them the Word and the Gospel which make men free because fit for liberty!

The croakers say: "But see the corruptions and the perils here at home!" Yea, verily! Within the shell of our own affairs we have done much amiss. Henceforth, our affairs are to be world affairs! Our performances hereafter and in these regions are to be conducted in the open court of the whole earth's concern. While we can without too crushing sense of shame let an Indian agent steal the red man's pine trees on our obscure frontiers we shall not be able, under the world's eye, to put scoundrel Governors over the Philippines or Porto Rico or the provinces of Cuba. We shall have to insist on and get good civil service yonder, which will react for perfect civil service here. We shall which will react for perfect civil service here. We shall sway our authority out there with a more prudent hand, which will compel us to greater probity and wisdom in home affairs.

Great responsibilities develop great powers and foster loftler ideals. Study of ideals for development of these insular trusts will of necessity broaden and purify our views of government at home. We shall make better speed ourselves for speeding these peoples on their way of greatness.

I see our own republic beginning with a narrow strip of Atlantic seaboard, stretching then south over the of Atlantic seaboard, stretching then south over the Floridas; reaching out to embrace the vast-areas to the Mississippi; opening then her arms to the luge Louisiana purchase of more than double all her former ar then enlarging her great heart to weicome the imperial then enlarging her great heart to weicome the importal spaces of the Lone Star State; then sweeping on to the Pacific by New Mexico to California; then taking in Alaska and reaching so far to the Orient that San Francisco is 150 miles east of the central meridian of our longitude! "Expansion," indeed! I see her multiplying her population twentyfold in a century; increasing her riches till their increase and their absolute bulk are far beyond that of any other people on the face of the earth!

At every step of this august, this imperial expansion, the prophets of pessimism have stood aghast with coward terrors. They protested against Florida. They roared in wrath against the importal expansion of the Louisianas. Texas was sure destruction. New Mexico and California would so stretch by limitless distances our writing that they would be heard to be seek except. and California would so stretch by limitless distances our unities that they would be bound to break across the ridge of the Rockies. They burst with derisive and indignant laughter at "Seward's Folly," Alaska. Daniel Webster wanted to trade the vast regions of Oregon, embracing everything west of the Rockies from the British line down to California, for the privilege of catching codfish off the Newfoundland coasts! These prophets of terror and apoxtles of littleness declared that the populations and barbarisms and alien faiths of these regions which our "expansions" covered would over-slaugh, corrupt and wreck us. We could not assimilate them or govern them. Indeed, all these expansions were impossible because unconstitutional and so void!

But somehow they have held as matter of fact in spite of the voidness, and we have managed to govern them in spite of the theoretical "impossibility!" Nor has the "wreck" finally whelmed us. One grave Senator declared that we would better give a hundred millions to any nation which would take the Louisiana curse off our hands and prohibit any American from ever settling within its borders than to keep it. Josiah Quincy threatened secession when it was proposed to admit Louisiana as a State. Congressmen fighting the Oregon treaty "thanked God that He had set the Rockies as a barrier to our westward extension," and a Cabinet minister said that "if $5 would construct a highway to the Pacific he would not give it." But somehow they have held as matter of fact in

The ruin of the republic has been dated over and over, from the hour of each of these extensions of territory, exactly as now ruin takes date from the declaration of exactly as now ruin takes date from the declaration of war with Spain. There is not a new or original wail in all the chorus of forlorn prognostications of disaster which we hear today. Our whole history has been of expansion attended by these wailing but vain protests. Had these protesters been heeded we should this day have been a fourth-rate strip of territory lying along the Atlantic Coast, if we could have maintained a national existence at all. But, overriding these protests, the half of our citizens are resident and blest, thriving in these vast regions, rich in the precious metals and fertile in all products of the soil, from which the prophets of evil so lugubriously warned us off.

However these things may be the die is cast. It has fertile in all products of the soil, from which the prophets of evil so lugubriously warned us off.

However these things may be, the die is cast. It has proved again impossible to dam the Nile with bulrushes. The treaty is signed, and will be ratified. We are in for it. History is history. That which 1898 has made cannot be unmade. Our shoulders are under the responsibility. We cannot shirk or shake it off. It is poor statesmanship, poorer patriotism and poorest manhood to stand haggling about what might have been done to avoid "this shameless war" and its consequences. The condition is upon us. We have nothing, absolutely nothing, now to do but to face the facts, to meet the existing conditions, for God and humanity.

It is time, too, to lay aside all petty haggling for partisan advantages. I know nothing which ought today to bury any man or group or cabal of men in so profound an abyss of contempt, or which will do it so thoroughly, as that he or they be discovered hunting around, nosing about in the mud, for some plan of action or opposition, in these vast and vital matters with a view to partisan or personal success in 1900!

God has bestowed upon this nation unexampled favor.

God has bestowed upon this nation unexampled favor, in which we can but plainly recognize the smile of his approval and his beneficient design. He enabled us, in a campaign of little more than 100 days, to win through a campaign of little more than 100 days, to win through to glorious conclusion a war for humanity, while we weep over fewer graves than the nation was used to mourn a generation ago at the end of a single battleday. Our sons have shown a heroism like that of their fathers. The Union is at last welded into one splendid unity. Our northern President, veteran of the civil war, is received through the cities of the South with, if possible, an even more fervid enthusiasm than in the North and West. Hereafter we shall scatter the flowers and speak our memorial orations over the graves of the blue and the gray alike. There is no more a North and speak our memoral orations over the graves of the blue and the gray alike. There is no more a North or South, an East or West. Thank God! Of this great year, too, has come a new union of hearts and hands and world policies between old Mother England and her sturdy daughter, in which union lies the scepter of earth's new era.

Behold Almighty God's great gift to the republic into Behold Almighty God's great gift to the republic into whose care He commits so immense a trust, and under whose banners they shall begin their march up toward the heights of a Christian civilization. "Who shall haul down the fiag" which He has so evidently flung to the breeze? "Every covenant which duty has made for us in the year 1898 we must keep!" Aye, brave and magnanimous Executive, keep those covenants of duty by God's help we will! And keeping these we do devoutly believe we shall be that nation and kingdom which serves Him and therefore shall not perish! Faithfu'lly keeping them we shall be, according to the divine law keeping them we shall be, according to the divine law of the universe, doing our best to succor the oppressed, teach the ignorant, ennoble and uplift mankind and bring in the kingdom of righteousness and truth—of our God and of His Christ.

Most Every day some one brings to us an old faded tin-type or a small exterior picture of a group taken out in the sun and tell us it is all they have of their departed one. We have to tell them little can be done with it. They would give a good deal if only they had a good photograph. Have you thought of this? ADDRESSES AND PROCEEDINGS OF THE NATIONAL EDUCATIONAL ASSOCIATION. [Washington: Published by the association.]

HE final selection of Los Angeles as the next place of meeting for the National Educational Associa-tion should be a matter of congratulation from the intellectual point of view. The important addresses, the debates and discussions that mark the meetings of this society, are matters of notable interest, not only to educators, but to others who are concerned with any advance in thought. The report of proceedings for 1898 fills a large volume, the contents of which include a wide range of subjects, some being directly upon technical methods, but a large proportion of such general interest as would attract the unprofessional thinker. Many brilliant educators are represented in these proceedings, and the prospect of hearing such addresses as lectures, during the coming session of the association, is assuredly a pleasing one.

Guide Book to the South. SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA. By Charles A. Kee [Los Angeles: Passenger department, Santa Route.] Keeler.

The tourist's guide-book is becoming more and more a thing of literary and pictorial attractiveness and less of a statistical bore as the years go by and the shrewd railroad agent grows wise in the art of catering to the universal lore of novelty and change. The Santa Fé Railroad issues an exceptionally worthy guide-book to Southern California, of which Charles A. Keeler, the well-known naturalist, is the author, and for which Mrs. Keeler has done some excellent drawings. Mr. Keeler has the scientist's sense of accuracy too well developed to indulge in indiscriminate rhapsody, and his descriptions are, therefore, satisfactory, even from the hardheaded statistician's point of view. The contemplating settler will not be led astray by Mr. Keeler's statements, nor will the speculator find himself far afield if he succumbs to the allurements of the south, as set forth in this little book, which is good reading for both traveler and stay-at-home. tourist's guide-book is becoming more and more traveler and stay-at-home.

Magazines of the Month.

ORTRAITS of two famous women bull fighters accompany an article on the senoritas toreras, by J. Torrey Connor, in The Land of Sunshine. Other in-teresting pictures illustrate the excitements of this characteristic Mexican sport, which the author vividly describes. Ruth Tangier Smith describes the island of San Clemente from the geological and picturesque points of view, and there is a tribute to "Amber," by Charles Warren Stoddard, and a Chinese story, by Sui Sin Fah, among other features of picturesque or instructive value.

of view, and there is a tribute to "Amber," by Charles Warpen Stoddard, and a Chinese story, by Sui Sin Fah, among other features of picturesque or instructive value. The New Year's number of the Metropolitan is a defightful biographical sketch-book, containing papers on the home and public life of such artists as Boutet de Monrel, Rosenthal, Adele Aus der Ohe and Thomas Jefferson, with mention of lesser lights of the stage and studio. Wilson G. Barnes writes of "Club Life in the Metropolis," and Alexander B. Stetson has an entertaining description of "The Bowery, Old and New."

Two valuable discussions of school work, as now followed in American public schools, are by Dr. L. L. W. Wilson and Prof. G. T. W. Patrick, in Appleton's Monthly for January. Prof. Patrick expresses his belief in the greater value of nature—study, history, and morals as expressed in certain manual dexterities and habits of conduct, over the customary practice of teaching children the study of letters. Prof. Patrick maintains that the subjects of reading, writing and arithmetic are not adapted to the first years of the child's psychological development, but should come later, after the sensory and motor mechanism has had full play. Prof. Jordan has three charming little animal stories that show his close study of the habits of birds and beasts, and Prof. Daniel S. Martin, George Geraland, Sir J. N. Lockyer and Hon. David A. Wells are also represented in valuable papers.

Osborn W. Diegnan, helmsman of the Merrimac, tells the story of its sinking, in the January Frank Lislie's. Mate Deignan tells-a vividly-interesting story, elaborately illustrated from photographs and drawings by prominent artists. Joaquin Miller recalls the lonely days of his Klondike experience, and tells of the thoughts that occupy a man's mind when there are no books and no friends at hand. Another California author represented in this number is Bret Harte, who begins a California story of characteristic style, and Francois Coppée tells the history of "The Orphan of

of Paul Tyner. Mr. Tyner's own magazine, The Temple; H. W. Dresser's Journal of Practical Metaphysics and the New Time, of lurid fame, have now ceased to exist as separate publications. The first issue under the new régime contains articles characteristic of the four magazines, including "Municipal Socialism in Boston," by Francis T. Douglas, and an admirable paper by Helen Campbell on "Social Settlements and the Civic Sense." The importance of Japan as one of the influences in the future of the Pacific, is dwelt upon in an article by C. Pfoundes, and Dr. Hulburt Fuller, author of "Vivian of Virginia," has a story of the war.

B. O. Flower, formerly of the Arena, has established a new magazine very much of the same character. Associated with him in its editorship is Mrs. C. K. Reifsnilder, and among the features of the first number are a symposium on Christmas and the New Year, a series of essays on timely topics, by prominent thinkers, and some problematic fiction.

Jevons is the subject of Gunton's "Distinguished Economists" sketch for the month, and the papers upon economics and public affairs include "Wealth and its Production," by A. H. McKnight; "Practical Defects of Socialism," by Frederick H. Cox; "Some Valuable Wage Statistics," and two articles upon the results of the war.

The Critic comes with the breezy presence of a muchloved friend into the life of the New Year, Miss Edith M. Thomas has written a charming New Year's acrostic which occupies the center of the cover, and within are to be found a host of delightful things in picture and print. The month's portraits are notably interesting, and there are also a series of drawings from the work of Mr. Gibson and Mr. May that illustrate admirably the characteristics of the two men. Miss Gilder's department of chat touches upon everyhting of conceivable interest in the literary, artistic and dramatic worlds, with the frankness of expression that is Miss Gilder's distinguishing quality. Bismarck's autibiography is reviewed at length by Charles de Kay, lat

Milton in a New Light.

Sand walking in the suburban promenades to look at the pretty girls—this is not altogether the way in which our fancy would have filled out the London holi-day of the young Puritan poet." Thus writes George Serrell in the December number of Temple Bar, and he goes on to say that this picture is one which Milton himself gives in his earliest Latin poem. This is a metrical epistle to Charles Deodati, his bosom friend, in the course of which he sings with enthusiasm of his rambles by the Strand. bles up the Strand:

"Ah, and how often have I been amazed by some beauty, Fit to make even Jove own himself youthful again!

Ay, and such exquisite brows, such hair light blown in breezes, Golden snares for the heart, set by the cunning of Love; Golden snares for the heart, set by the cunning of Love; Oh, and the lip-luring cheeks, to which hyacinthian purple Poor is, and even the blush seen on Adonis's flower. Yield, ye heroic fair once, the themes of cycles of legend, Even the famousest nymph wooed by a vagabond god.

Giory the foremost is due to these our virgins of Britain, Be it enough for you, foreigners fair, to come next." This same poem makes clear the fact that Milton did share with the Puritans of his day their horror of man himself, Mr. Serrell colses his paper with the following words:

'It may be that a study of his Latin poems does not tend to raise the moral estimate of him which we form from his English ones, but, for better or for worse, they are indispensable to a true knowledge of him in his youth and earlier manhood. Then, as in later years, he was a man more to be respected and admired than to be loved, but because he does not appeal greatly to our hearts, we perhaps run some risk of forgetting how fine a character he was. To his Italian friend, Manso, he seemed almost faultless, but for his heresy, and Manso adapted to him the words of Gregory about the Saxon youths:

'Mind, form, grace, face, morals-if what all these are, thy en not Anglic alone, truly Angelic theu'dst be. "To us the defect lies elsewhere, in a want of tenderness and lovingness; but it must not blind us to the moral greatness of the man in whom were united, to an exceptional degree, the old Roman's public spirit and love of freedom, the old Hebrew's trust in God, and the Christian's stainless and jealously-guarded purity."

Concerning Originality.

According to Literature, it is not entirely paradoxical to say that a man is the most original of writers and at the same time the greatest of plagarists. In this connection the writer refers to some of the older writers

"We all know that Shakespeare's borrowing arm was a very long one, indeed. Old chronicles, North's Plutarch, medieval English poetry, Italian novelists, contemporary playwrights—all were laid under contribution; and in the same way, Milton probably conveyed 'L'Allegro' and 'Il Penseroso' from Burton's 'Abstract of Melancholy,' and certainly made considerable use of the Dutch poet's 'Lucifer' in the construction of 'Paradise Lost.' 'Tristram Shandy' is one of the most 'original' books in English literature, and yet it is a patchwork of outrageous thefts, and Melancholy Burton himself, from whom Sterne stole, contrived to get the effect of 'originality' into his 'Anatomy,' which is a mere cento of quotations.

"In one sense of the word, there is no such thing as originality; in another sense, it is not uncommon. The Italian novelists, from whom Shakespeare plagarized, were themselves but copyists from older sources, and folklorists are aware that the Europeans of the middle ages enjoyed tales that had amused Asia in far antiquity. The matter of a literary work of art may come from nature, from life, or from another book, while the form is created by the author. In some of Poe's tales it is easy enough to detect the influence of Mrs. Radcliffe, and Mrs. Radcliffe drew her stories from a very imperfect and distorted notion of medieval romance, and medieval romance was founded to a considerable extent on early Celtic legends, and Celtic legends cento of quotations.
"In one sense of must owe a good deal to prehistoric Turanian influence—and so the ladder mounts till it vanishes as in the Indian juggler's trick; but for all that, the 'Fall of the House of Usher' is original. It is barely possible, of course, that the Paleolithic age swarmed, not only with monsters (now happily extinct,) but with purely original geniuses, but in modern times it would be as useless to search for the one as for the other."

Mr. Shaw's Inspiration.

Ithe Critic:] Bernard Shaw is always interesting if not amusing. He is a faddist, as everybody knows, and at the present moment his pet fad is vegetarianism. He has stuck to this diet longer than Edward Fitz-Gerald cid. Fitz-Gerald tried it, and was delighted with it at first, but he soon forsook it for something more substantial. According to Mr. Shaw, "vegetarianism is the foundation of the finest intellectual dramas." He accuses Mary, of reverend memory, of having eaten her little lamb, and yet, so far as I know, there is nothing in history to prove this horrible accusation. No lambenters into the composition of his brain. Each of his plays was the inspiration of a different vegetable. "I wrote," he says, "'Mrs. Warren's Profession' on lentil soup, 'You Never Can Tell' on beans, and 'Candida' on potatoes; for, although, as an Irishman, I can pretend to patriotism, neither for the country I have abandoned nor the country that has ruined it, I retain the national love for the potato. To resume, "The Quintessence of Ibscnism' was written on cabbage, and 'The Perfect Wagnerite' (due in the course of a week or so, and the most masterly exposition of Wagner that will ever appear,) on savory ple. And these are great works. Has Mary, I ask, done anything of the kind? I will wager that she has not. And why has she not? Because her intellect is dulled, her sight dimmed and rendered abnormal, her sympathy blunted, her logical faculty bemused, by this infernal lamb."

Influencing an Editor.

[New York Commercial Advertiser:] The Saturday Evening Post is making great strides in increasing its circulation, and has reached over the 200,000 mark, according to authority. Its serial, "The Market Place," by the late Harold Frederic, has something to do with this, as well as other good influences. In a recent number of the periodical, Robert Barr has written one of the best, if not the best, appraisement of the personality of Mr. Frederic that has appeared since his death—the kind of article which revives the regret that a good writer or any fine man should have to die in his prime. Among the many bits of descriptive and personal anecdote which the article contains is the following amusing tale relative to Clement Shorter and Mr. Frederic: night at the club holding forth eloquently on Shorter's shortcomings.

"'Mr. dear man,' said Frederic, seriously, 'Shorter is one of the best editors in the world, and one of the best fellows. All you are saying simply shows that you don't know how to deal with him. When I have a story that I want to sell to Shorter, I wear that big, yellow, shaggy ulster which comes down to my heels. I turn the collar up over my ears. I put on that disreputable hoodlum cap I got in America twenty years ago, and draw it down over my eyes. I take a blackthorn stick given to me in Ireland, as thick is your thigh. I don't announce myself, but walk into his room, close the door and set my back against it for a moment, until Shorter has had time to focus his glasses on what is before him; then I take three strides to his table, and rapping gently on it with my blackthorn, thunder out in a deep, harsh voice: 'Shorter, I have a story to sell you!' He buys it right away.'

To appreciate all the humor of this picture, Mr. Barr reminds us that "Harold Frederic was a man of huge, commanding presence, fierce of aspect. "A a gruft voice."

HE poets of Paris have elected their new "Prince." Stephane Mallarmé's successor is one Leon Dierx. The matter was taken in hand by the great newspaper, Le Temps, which discovered no less than sixty poets entitled to cast a vote in the election.

A story of the American revolution from the pen of Paul Leicester Ford will run in the Bookman during

The ex-Empress Eugenie is said to be writing the memoirs of her life. Such a work would have an interest beyond the run of the average autobiography.

Robert Chambers, after he has completed the fourth of his series of novels on the French revolution, will write another series dealing with New York society life. A complete edition of the works of Paul Verlaine, in five volumes, is in preparation in Paris. The prose writings are to be included, together with some hitherto unpublished poetry.

The United States Bureau of Ethnology will print, under the editorship of A. S. Gatschet, a dictionary of the language of the Massachusetts Indians from manuscripts left by the late Dr. J. Hammond Trumbull.

Some of the officers and men of the battleship Indiana have had the happy idea of putting in book form, for the pleasure of those most concerned, her great record in the war with Spain. The little volume is compiled and published by Chief Yeoman Mero and edited by Chaplain Cassard, who furnished from photographs many of the illustrations. Some of his undeveloped films were unexpectedly interfered with when a bursting Spanish 8-inch mortar shell made havoc in the ship, leaving a dent in her punch bowl, besides other souvenirs of its presence; and the result was to give a peculiar appearance to a few of the pictures in the book, not, however, without enhancing their historic interest. Facing the title page is a portrait of Capt. Henry Clay Taylor, who so ably commanded and fought the Indiana during the war.

[New York Commercial Advertiser:] We have recently had occasion to comment upon the exceptional praise which Rudyard Kipling saw fit to bestow upon Frank Bullen, author of "The Cruise of the Cachelot," and now our attention is called to another instance in which a new writer has found special favor with the author of "The Jungle Tales." The gentleman in question is William Charles Scully, a magistrate of Pondoland, South Africa, who has recently written a story about that out-of-the-way corner of the globe. It will appear in the February number of Scribner's Magazine. Mr. Kipling pronounces the story excellent, especially as regards local color, and says that there is no question about the author knowing well both the land and the people. Mr. Scully has already written one novel, entitled "Between Sea and Land," but it is quite unknown to the American reading public.

RUSSIA'S ASIATIC POSSESSIONS

SLOW ADVANCE OF THE LAND/LOCKED GIANT TO THE SEA.

[BY A SPECIAL ONTRIBUTOR.]

recent appointment of Lord Curzon as Vicercy of India, and the publication of Rudyard Kipling's poem, "The Truce of the Bear," have awakened in the American people an interest in the so-called Anglo-Russian question.

It is only in the last twenty years that the majority of people in England have come to recognize the exist ence of such a question. The British ministries which have held office duing the past half century, have in the main, displayed a "masterly inactivity" in regard to England's interest in Central Asia, while Russia on the other hand, has advanced steadily on in her career of conquest and assimilation, until the British statesmen have been forced to acknowledge that their Indian from tier was menaced by a powerful and a determined for Under these circumstances, it is interesting to note the way in which Russia has conducted her Asiatic policy and the present condition of her Asiatic dominions.

For a number of years prior to 1850, Russia's southeastern frontier station was Orenburg. Along the south-ern border of Siberia were a number of forts guarding the fontier bordering on Turkestan. This vast region to the south was inhabited by a number of nomad tribes and a number of Tartars who lived in towns. All of these people were a source of continued trouble to the Russian merchants, who went on trading expeditions to Samarkand and Bokhara. The soldiers were called frequently to punish natives who had robbed or murdered Russian subjects. The soldiers, having once advanced into Turkestan, found that in order to preserve peace and law, they would have to found permanent settlements and stay in them. Had they retreated, after meting out punishment to the offenders, the Tartar tribes would have robbed and murdered as before; as it was, the soldiers could prevent crime to a great extent by staying in the Tartar region for good. In this way the Russian frontier was pushed steadily southeastward into Turkestan. This process of extension began about the middle of the century.

Russia has been credited in England and elsewhere with a deep-laid plan of conquest, but the facts are, that circumstances have forced her to advance, and she has been wise enough to seize the opportunities which fortune has given to her.

circumstances have forced her to advance, and she has been wise enough to seize the opportunities which fortune has given to her.

Russian armies under the command of such men as Tchernaleff and Skobeleff, were sent into Turkestan to overcome the Tartar tribes, and to establish protectorates over the native principalities. Tashkend, Bokhara and Samarkand were occupied by the end of 1880. Russia showed a wise moderation in her treatment of the native rulers. The troops stationed at the places mentioned above, were quartered at some distance from the native Prince's palace in each case. The latter were not deprived of their sovereignty (except at Tashkend,) the Russians giving the Tartars to understand that the European soldiers were brought to Turkestan merely to protect the life and property, of each Russian citizen. In this way conflict was to a great extent avoided.

In the region between the Oxus and the Caspian, however, Russia assumed absolute control. The rebellion of the Tartars culminated in the siege and battle of Geok Tepe in 1881, at which Skobeleff utterly defeated the natives, and established the Russian sovereignty. Geok Tepe cc=ed the Tartars completely, and effectively quenched any spirit of rebellion.

By 1885 Russia had firmly established herself in Turkestan. The occupation of Mero opened up the resources of the Mero oasis, and also furnished a base of operation against Afghanistan, in the case of war. Although forced on by circumstances, let it not be supposed that Russia was not aware of the military importance of the Trans-Caspian territory. The selzure of the Oxus basin opened a convenient and short route to Herat. This latter place once acquired, it would be but a step in Kandahar, the "Gate of India."

But, although civilians have been allowed to travel for over a month to reach Mero. This problem was solved by one of the brightest men Russia has produced. Gen. Annenkoff proposed the construction of a railroad from the Caspian to Samarkand. In the face of great obstacles, this railroad abling Russia, as it does, to place troops on the Indian frontier in about fifteen days.

An extension from Samarkand to Tashkend, from Orenburg to Tashkend, and a branch from the Transsiberian Railroad are only matters of time, if, indied, they are not already in process of construction.

Russia has endeavored to advance agriculture and commerce in Turkestan. Irrigation canals have changed the desert into fertile land, and so increased the value of this region. Cotton plantations have been started at Tashkend, and have proved to be paying enterprises. A number of colonies of industrious German people have been founded in various places, and the social and political conditions have been remarkably improved.

NO NEW PASTIMES FOR THEM.

[New York Sun:] "Probably nowhere are the social pastimes of the fathers preserved and induged in to such an extent as among the Pennsylvania Dutch. The apple-cut, the corn husking, the quilting bee, the old-fashioned country dance, furnish amusement and recreation to the buxom maiden and the swains of these people today as they did to those of a century ago—that is—excepting the Mennonite, Amish and Dunkards. Those plous branches of the Pennsylvania Dutch do not indulge in such dissipations, as it would place them forever out of the pale of their church. A baptism, a love feast, or a funeral is the only recreation or pastime they are permitted to enjoy. A Pennsylvania Dutch dance is kept up from early evening until daylight. There is no going to bed after a dance. The women go at once to their household duties and the men to their labors in the fields, the same as if they had slept as usual, according to the custom of their fathers. Work, indoor and out, begins as soon as it is light enough to indoor and out, begins as soon as it is light enough to see, and continues until it is too dark to see, winter

"The Pennsylvania Dutch farmer is as honest as the day is long, and is most close-fisted and exacting in a bargain. Driving long distances to market, he will haggle over a dime in a bargain that may involve a hundred dollars' worth of produce, and if assured that by going on half a dozen miles or so he will be able to sell his goods and get that dime, he will not hesitate to make the journey. The extra time and labor he does not stop to take into account. The old-time Pennsylvania Dutch families discourage and disapprove of marriage that will destroy the race purity of their blood, hence marriages with outside people are not frequent. This accounts for the remarkable preservation of the language, the customs, and the traditions of their forebears among these people, surrounded as they are to language, the customs, and the traditions of their fore-bears among these people, surrounded as they are to-day by influences of the highest modern thought and example. But, notwithstanding their exclusiveness, their tenacious adherence to ideas of a century ago and stubborn resistance to those of today, the lessons in in-dustry, integrity, thrift and thoroughness which they have given have had a most beneficial influence not only in the particular region which they have developed, but throughout the country as well, and our land is a hundred-fold the better for their presence."

EXTRA SPEED.

[Detroit Free Press:]- It was 2 o'clock in the morning, all of the reporters but one had gone home. The night editor sat at his deak, reading over the copy of the last femaining reporter. There hadn't been a word spoken for a half hour. The rumbling of the distant presses and the clicking of the typewriter were the only sounds that broke the silence of the night.

"Say," said the telephone, "we are having a little discussion down here in Hogan's place, and we want to know which can fly the faster, a canvasback duck or "Say, Bill," yelled the night editor to the solitary reporter, "which can fly the faster, a canvasback duck or a red-headed woodpecker?"

"Duck," laconically answered the reporter.
The night editor turned to the telephone and told that the duck was much the swifter aerial navigator of the two.

"How much faster?" asked the telephone.
"How much faster, Bill?"
"Eight miles an hour in warm weather and ten miles

"Eight miles an hour in warm weather and ten miles if it's cold."
"Eight miles an hour," repeated the night editor.
"Why is it?" asked the telephone.
"Why is it, Bill."

MATURE SIRENS.

MATURE SIRENS.

Would it shock you to learn that many prima donne and soubrettes who have been delighting theater-goers in 16-year-old characters are grandmothers and that a great many of them are mothers of grown-up sons and daughters? People of the stage grow older as the years go by just the same as other people, and their children grow into manhood and womanhood just like other people's children. Among prima donne there isn't a single grandmother of prominence, but nearly every one of them is the proud mother of one or more children. Lilian Russell's daughter, Lillian Solomon, is now about 18 years old and is studying at St. George, but not for the stage. Camille d'Arville is now nearly 19 years old and is attending a military school. Pauline Hall is the mother of two children, the younger one being nearly 3 years old. Ida Hopper, De Wolf Hopper's former wife, has a very fine boy. Helen Bertram of the Bostonians, whose first husband was Sig. Tomassi, the orchestra leader, declares that her 3-year-old girl is not to be an actress. Louise Montague has a son, who, though not yet of age by several years, is taller and actually looks older than his remarkably well-preserved mother, who continues to grow younger as the days go by. Marion Manola's daughter, Adelaide, has played minor parts in support of her mother. Among soubrettes proper, Maggle Mitchell, who, though she has retired from the stage, is soon to be represented by her daughter, Fanchon, as a grandmother. Fanchon Mitchell Paddock is the wife of J. W. Albaugh, Jr., and the mother of a couple of children. Queenie Vassar Lynch, now with the "Belle of New York" company, has two children. Fanny Rice, who married Dr. Purdy, has two or three children. The stork has hovered over the home of Nellie McHenry and John Webster several times. Belle Thorne, Mrs. Herman Perlet, has a child 3 years old. Frankle Kemble, who was the wife of the unfortunate Edward Clayburg, had a grown-up son when she was playing soubrette roles. Dollie Theobald's mother, Jenny Theobald,

THE ANCIENT DRAMA.

[New York Sun:] The "revival of ancient drama as an educative factor in modern life" is one of the purposes of the Isis League of Music and Drama. The attempt has been made and "The Eumenides" of Eschylus was applied to as much of modern life as two small audiences at the Carnegie Lyceum could be taken to represent. The effort was a complete success. If the ancient drama is revived continually the public need never lack for amusement. The Isis League of Music and Drama can drive the burlesque comedians to bankruptcy if it continues to serve out Eschylus as it has for the past two evenings. The participants in the play were shrouded in anonymity. Only the names of the characters were printed on the programmes. But that never disturbed the seriousness of their efforts. Quietlooking ladies who seemed as if they had never before wandered from their firesides strenuously declaimed blank verse. Mild-mannered men just up from business marched solemnly around in Grecian draperies. Muttonchop whiskers and chaplets were incongruous, and the lumpy knees of the warriors were not in accordance, with the highest standards of Greek beauty. But they went through their evolutions with as much earnestness as they would measure tape. The Furies were draped in black capes stiff and shiny. They carried red scarfs and seemed to have trouble with their "r's." When they danced it was not at all in the Grecian fashion. One interloper bounded in at his stage of the game and cavorted about in the most acrobatic and modern fashion. At other times the Furies draped themselves into attitudes which displayed their red scarfs as attractively as if they were yards of dress goods in the windows of a department store. These young women's faces were concealed from the view of the public most of the time by their veits. But it was occasionally seen that they were not as dire as the Furies were supposed to be, but were in reality very comely. There were various other inaccuracies in the performance.

have been. Or the criterion has changed. But a meager Apollo with blond hair, rather a sharp nose and no calves to speak of, does not represent the customary idea of Apollo. But the question of beauty is comparative, and even the fashions in that change. Even Orestes was about as far removed from the Greek model as he well could have been. But the actors seemed to enjoy themselves. The audience certainly did. The progress of the story was accompanied by music not of a kind to increase the hilarity of the spectators. But that was scarcely needed.

TOO MUCH REALISM.

[Kansas City Star:] This playing of heroes in the romantic drama looks like an agreeable job from the front, but after the curtain is down they often have to send for a surgeon to patch one of them up. Since the Empire Stock Company abandoned the conventional clothing of the current time for the feathers and furbelows of periods more or less remote and of lands sometimes entirely mythical, William Faversham has found that heroism, even the assumed heroism of the stage, has its penalties, and that the penalties are a good deal more real than the heroism and more disagreeable. In "Under the Red Robe" Faversham proved himself not quite the crack swordsman that Gil de Berault was said to be, and in the duel with the Englishman, which causes the latter's death and gets the former into trouble with Richelieu, he was severely slashed. In "The Conquerors" he played a somewhat brutal Prussian officer who deserved stabbing. So one night Viola Allen's trick dagger refused to do the trick and stabbed the villainous hero in reality, also in the back. Now he is playing the adventurous Lord Wheatley in "Phroso," and Miss Milward, as the heroine, cut his hand pretty badly last week. As we must have a realistic conflict, the-actor must either perfect his swordsmanship or take his chance. that heroism, even the assumed heroism of the stage,

HEREDITARY TALENT.

It is a fact that most of the successful stage people cf today came from families which have been devoted to the stage and its art. Annie Yeamans, who since the death of Mrs. John Drew, is the oldest living exponent of purely American dramatic art, has given to the stage two daughters—Lydia Yeamans Titus and Jennie Yeamans. Ethel Barrymore comes naturally by her talent and good looks, for she is the daughter of Maurice Barrymore and the late Georgia Drew Barrymore. Maude Adams is the daughter of Annie Adams, an actress of the old school, and Viola Allen's father is Leslie Allen, who scored his principal success in "Men and Women Years ago theater-goers used to rave over McKee Rankin and his wife, Kitty Blanchard. Their fame is still kept before the public by their daughter, Gladys Rankin Drew, wife of Sydney Drew, and Phyllis Rankin, who is now playing in "The Belle of New York." Frank Mayo, once one of the noted actors of the stage, bequeathed to it his daughter Eleanor, who five years ago made a great success when she appeared in "The Princess Bonnie." She has since married and retired. His son Frank is a well-known theatrical figure. Fay Templeton is the daughter of John Templeton, who knew everything about the show business, from taking tickets at a circus to acting as impressario of a grand-opera company. Her mother is still on the stage. Flora Walsh, the first wife of Charles Hoyt, was a noted actress and was the daughter of Alice Walsh, recognized as one of the best "character" actresses on the stage till she retired after the death of her daughter. and his wife, Kitty Blanchard. Their fame is still kept
